7. Remote from, not within the sphere of.

With equal mind, what happens, let us bear;
Nor joy, nor grieve too much for things beyond our care.
Dryden's Fables.

8. To go beyond, is to deceive, to circumvent.

She made earnest benefit of his jest, forcing him to do her such services, as were both cumbersome and costly; while he still thought he went beyond her, because his heart did not commit the idolatry. Sidney.

That no man go beyond, and defraud his brother in any matter 1 Thess. iv. 6.

BE'ZEL. } n. s. That part of a ring in which the stone is BE'ZIL. } fixed.

BE'ZOAR. n. s. [from pa, against, and zahar, poison, Persick] A medicinal stone, formerly in high esteem as an antidote, and brought from the East Indies, where it is said to be found in the dung of an animal of the goat kind, called pazan; the stone being formed in its belly, and growing to the size of an acorn, and sometimes to that of a pigeon's egg. Were the real virtues of this stone answerable to its reputed ones, it were doubtless a panacea. Indeed its rarity, and the peculiar manner of its formation, which is now supposed to be fabulous, have perhaps contributed as much to its reputation as its intrinsick worth. At present, it begins to be discarded in the practice of medicine, as of no efficacy at all. There are also some occidental bezoars brought from Peru, which are reckoned inferiour to the oriental. The name of this stone is also applied to several chymical compositions, designed for antidotes, or counter-poisons; as mineral, solar, and jovial bezoars.
Savary. Chambers.

The hoarſe rough verſe ſhould like the torrent roar. Pope.

To BILLOW. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell, or roll, as a wave.

The billowing snow, and violence of the show'r,
That from the hills disperse their dreadful store,
And o'er the vales collected ruin pour. Prior.

BILLOWY. adj. [from billow.] Swelling; turgid; wavy.

And whitening down the mossy-nectar'd stream,
Descends the billowy foam. Thomson's Spring, l. 380.

BIN. n. s. [binne, Sax.] A place where bread, or corn, or wine, is reposited.

The most convenient way of picking hops, is into a long square frame of wood, called a bin. Mortimer's Husbandry.

As when from rooting in a bin,
All pouder'd o'er from tail to chin,
A lively maggot sallies out,
You know him by his hazel snout. Swift.

BINARY. adj. [from binus, Lat.] Two; dual, double.

BINARY Arithmetick. A method of computation proposed by Mr. Leibnitz, in which, in lieu of the ten figures in the common arithmetick, and the progression from ten to ten, he has only two figures, and uses the simple progression from two to two. This method appears to be the same with that used Chinese four thousand years ago. Chambers.

BINDING. n. s. [from bind] A bandage.

This beloved young woman began to take off the binding of his eyes. Tatler, N° 55.

BINDWEED. n. s. [convolvulus, Lat.] The name of a plant.

It hath, for the most part, trailing stalks; the leaves grow alternately on the branches; the flower consists of one leaf, shaped like a bell, whose mouth is widely expanded, the ova becomes a roundish membraneous fruit, wrapped up within the flower cup; and is generally divided into three cells, each containing one angular seed. The species are thirty six. 1. The common white great bindweed, vulgarly called hearbind. 2. Lesser field bindweed, with a rose coloured flower, vulgarly called gravelbind. 3. Common sea bindweed, with round leaves. 4. Great American bindweed, with spacious yellow sweet scented flowers, commonly called Spanish arbour vine, or Spanish woodbine. 5. White and yellow Spanish potatoes. 6. Red Spanish potatoes. 7. The jalap, &c. The first of these species is a very troublesome weed in gardens; and the second sort is still a worse weed than the former. The third sort is found upon gravelly or sandy shores, where the salt water overflows: this is a strong purge, and, as such, is often used in medicine. The fourth sort is common in the hot parts of America, and is planted to cover arbours and seats: one of these plants will grow to the length of sixty or an hundred feet, and produce great quantities of side branches, and large fragrant yellow flowers, succeeded by three large angular seeds. The two kinds of potatoes are much cultivated in the West Indies, for food; and, from the roots, a drink is made, called mobby, stronger or weaker: it is a sprightly liquour, but not subject to fly into the head; nor will it keep beyond four or five days. These roots have been brought from America, and are cultivated in Spain and Portugal, but, in general, they are not so well liked as the common potato, being too sweet and luscious. The jalap, whose root has been long used in medicine, is a native of the province of Itzapa, about two days journey from La Vera Cruz. Miller.

Bindweed is of two sorts, the larger and the smaller; the first sort flowers in September, and the last in June and July. Mortimer's Husbandry.

BI'NOCLE. n. s. [from binus and oculus.] A kind of dioptrick telescope, fitted so with two tubes joining together in one, as that a distant object may be seen with both eyes together. Harris.

Shakeſp. Merry Wives of Windſor.

BI'RDLIME. n. ſ. [from bird and lime.] A glutinous ſubſtance, which is ſpread upon twigs, by which the birds that light upon them are entangled.

Birdlime is made of the bark of holly, boiled for ten or twelve hours; and when the green coat is ſeparated from the other, they cover it up for a fortnight, in a moiſt place, and pound it into a tough paſte, that no fibres of the wood be left; then it is waſhed in a running ſtream, till no motes appear, and put up to ferment for four or five days, and ſcummed as often as any thing ariſes, and then laid up for uſe; at which time they incorporate with it a third part of nut oil, over the fire. [illegible] birdlime brought from Damaſcus is [illegible] to be made of berbeſtens, the kernels being frequently found in it, but this will not endure the froſt or wet. That brought from Spain is of an ill ſmell, but the bark of our lantone, or wayfaring ſhrub, will make very good birdlime. Chambers.

Holly is of ſo viſcous a juice, as they make birdlime of the bark of it. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N° 592.

With ſhores of gather'd glue, come
To ſtop the vents and crannies of their hive;
Not birdlime, or Idean pitch, produce
A more tenacious maſs of clammy juice. Dryden's Virg.

I'm ennar'd,
Heav'ns birdlime wraps me round, and glues my wings.
Dryden's King Arthur.

The woodpecker, and other birds of this kind, becauſe they prey upon flies which they catch with their tongue, have a couple of bags filled with a viſcous humour, as if it were a natural birdlime, or liquid glue.
Grew's Coſmologia Sacra, b. i. c. 5.

BI'RDMAN. n. ſ. [from bird and man.] A birdcatcher; a fowler.

As a fowler was bending his net, a blackbird aſked him what he was doing; why, ſays he, I am laying the foundations of a [illegible], and ſo the birdman drew out of ſight. L'Eſtrange.

BI'RDSEYE. n. ſ. [Adonis, Lat.] The name of a plant.

The leaves are like fennel or chamomile, the flowers conſiſt of many leaves, which are expanded in form of a roſe; the ſeeds are collected into oblong heads. The ſpecies are, 1. The common red birds eye. 2. The long leaved yellow birds eye, &c. The firſt ſort is ſown in open borders, as an annual flower plant. The yellow ſort is uncommon in England.
Miller.

BI'RDSFOOT. [ornithopodium, Lat.] The name of a plant.

It has a papilionaceous flower, the ovary, which riſes out of the flower cup, afterwards becomes a pod, ſometimes diſtinguiſhed into cells by tranſverſe partitions, full of ſeeds, for the moſt part roundiſh; the leaves grow by threes, but have two wings, or little leaves, at the origin of their ſtalks. The ſpecies are, 1. The talleſt hairy birdsfoot treſoil, with a glomerated flower. 2. Upright hoary birdsfoot treſoil, &c. The firſt of theſe plants is, by ſome, ſuppoſed to be the cytiſus of Virgil; it dies to the ground with us every winter, and riſes again the ſucceeding ſpring; and, when the roots are ſtrong, the ſhoots will riſe to four or five feet high, and produce flowers in great plenty; if it be cut while young, the cows are very fond of it, but horſes will not eat it, unleſs they are very hungry.
Miller.

In arms, the praise of success is shared amongst many; yet the blame of misadventures is charged upon one.
Sir J. Hayward.

They lay the blame on the poor little ones, sometimes fictitiously enough, to divert it from themselves. L'Estrange.

2. Crime; that which produces or deserves censure.

Who would not judge us to be discharged of all blame, which are confest to have no great fault, even by their very word and testimony, in whose eyes no fault of ours hath ever hitherto been accustomed to seem small. Hooker, b. v. § 2.

I unspeak mine own detraction, here abjure
The taints and blames I laid upon myself,
For strangers to my nature. Shakesp.

3. Hurt.

Therewith upon his crest,
With rigour so outrageous he smit,
That a large share it hew'd out of the rest,
And glancing down his shield, from blame him fairly blest.
Fairy Queen, b. [illegible].

4. There is a peculiar structure of this word, [illegible] not very evident whether it be a noun or a verb; but I conceive it to be the noun. To blame, in French, à

You were to blame, I must be plain with you,
To part so slightly with your wife's first gift.
Shakesp. Merchant of Ve[illegible].

I do not ask whether they were mistaken, but, on supposition they were not, whether they were to blame in the manner.

Now we should hold them much to blame,
If they went back before they came. Prior.

BLAMEFUL. adj. [from blame and full.] Criminal, guilty; meriting blame.

My lords, the senators
Are sold for slaves, and their wives for bondswomen.
Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

BONE. n. f. [ban, Saxon.]

1. The ſolid parts of the body of an animal are made up of hard fibres, tied one to another by ſmall tranſverſe fibres, as thoſe of the muſcles. In a fœtus they are porous, ſoft, and cartilaginous. As their pores fill with a ſubſtance of their own nature, ſo they increaſe, harden, and grow cloſe to one another. They are all ſpongy, and full of little cells, or are of a conſiderable firm thickneſs, with a large cavity, except the teeth, and where they are articulated, they are covered with a thin and ſtrong membrane, called the periſteum. Each bone is made bigger at its extremity than in the middle, that the ligaments might be firm, and the bones not eaſily put out of joint. But, becauſe the middle of the bone ſhould be ſtrong, to ſuſtain its allotted weight, and reſiſt accidents, the fibres are there more cloſely compacted together, ſupporting one another; and the bone is made hollow, and conſequently not ſo eaſily broken, as it muſt have been, had it been ſolid and ſmaller. Quincy.

Thy bones are marrowleſs, thy blood is cold. Macbeth.

There was lately a young gentleman laid to the bone. Tatler.

2. A fragment of meat; a bone with as much fleſh as adheres to it.

Like Æſop's hounds, contending for the bone,
Each pleaded right, and would be gone alone. Dryden.

3. To be upon the bones. To attack.

Puſs had a month's mind to be upon the bones of him, but was [illegible] L'Eſtrange.

4. [illegible] To take away, [illegible] from a dog, who readily ſwallows meat that has no bones.

5. BONES. A ſort of bobbins, made of trotter bones, for weaving boneface.

6. BONES. Dice.

But then my ſtudy was to cog the dice,
And cautiouſly to throw the lucky ſice,
To ſhun ames ace that ſwept my ſtakes away;
And watch the box, for fear they ſhould convey Falſe bones, and put upon me in the play. Dryden's Pref.

To BONE. v. a. [from the noun.] To take out the bones from [illegible]

BO'NELACE. n. f. [from bone and lace; the bobbins with which lace is woven being frequently made of bones.] Flaxen lace, ſuch as women wear on their linen.

BRAMBLE n. [the mas[illegible]

1. This plant hath a flower consisting of five leaves, which are placed circularly, and expand in form of a rose; the flower-cup is divided into five parts, containing many stamina, or chives, in the bosom of the flower, in the centre of which rises the pointal, which afterwards becomes the fruit, consisting of many protuberances, and full of juice. The species are, 1. The common bramble, or blackberry bush. 2. The dewberry bush, or lesser bramble. 3. The common greater bramble bush, with white fruit. 4. The greater bramble bush, with a beautiful striped leaf. 5. The raspberry bush, or hindberry. 6. The raspberry bush, with white fruit. 7. The raspberry bush, with late red fruit. 8. The raspberry bush, without thorns. 9. The Virginian raspberry bush, with black fruit. The first and second sorts are very common in hedges, and upon dry banks, in most parts of England, and are rarely cultivated in gardens. The third sort was found by Mr. Jacob Bobart in a hedge, not far from Oxford. The fourth sort is a variety of the common bramble, differing therefrom only in having striped leaves. The raspberry bush is also very common in divers woods, in the northern counties of England; but is cultivated in all curious gardens, for the sake of its fruit. All these plants are easily propagated by suckers, which they send from the roots in great plenty. The best time to take them off, and transplant them, is in October. Miller.

2. It is taken, in popular language, for any rough prickly shrub.

The bush my bed, the bramble was my bow'r,
The woods can witness many a woful store. Spenser's Past.

All on a sudden the doors flew open, and ... roaring bullies, with their wenches, their ... L'Estrange's Fables.

'Tis so ridic'lous, but so true withal,
A bully cannot sleep without a brawl. Dryden's Juv. sat. III.

A scolding hero is, at the worst, a more tolerable character than a bully in petticoats. Addison's Freeholder, N° 38.

The little man is a bully in his nature, but, when he grows choleric, I confine him till his wrath is over. Addison Spect.

To BULLY, v. a. [from the noun.] To overbear with noise or menaces.

Prentices, parish clerks, and hectors meet,
He that is drunk, or bully'd, pays the treat.

To BULLY, v. n. To be noisy.

BULRUSH, n. f. [from bull and ...

grows in rivers, without knots; though Dryden has given it the epithet knotty, confounding it, probably, with the reed.

To make fine cages for the nightingale,
And baskets of bulrushes, was my wont. Spenser

All my praises are as but a bulrush cast upon a stream, they are born up by the strength of the current. Dryden.

The edges were with bending osiers crown'd,
The knotty bulrush next in order stood,
And all within of reeds a trembling wood. Dryden's Fables.

BULWARK. n. f. [bolwerke, Dutch, probably only from its strength and largeness.]

1. A fortification, a citadel.

But him the squire made quickly to retreat,
Encountering fierce with single sword in hand,
And 'twixt him and his lord did like a bulwark stand
Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. viii. stanz. 12.

Who oft repair
Their earthen bulwarks 'gainst the ocean flood. Fairfax, b. i.

Taking away needless bulwarks, divers were demolished upon the sea coasts. Hayward.

We have bulwarks round us;
Within our walls are troops enur'd to toil. Addison's Cato.

Our naval strength is a general bulwark to the British nation.
Addison's Freeholder, N° 42.

2. A security

Some making the wars their bulwark, that have before gored the gentle bosom of peace with pillage and robbery. Shakesp.

To BU'LWARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To fortify, to strengthen with bulwarks.

And yet no bulwark'd town, or distant coast,
Preserves the beauteous youth from being lost. Addison.

BUM n. f. [bomme, Dutch.]

1. The buttocks; the part on which we sit.

The wisest aunt telling the saddest tale,
Sometime for threefoot stool mistaketh me,
Then slip I from her bum, down topples she. Shakesp.

This said, he gently rais'd the knight,
And set him on his bum upright. Hudibras

From dusty shops neglected authours come,
Martyrs of pies, and reliques of the bum. Dryden's Mackfl.

[illegible],
But profound thought will bring the gout,
And that with bum on couch we lie,
Because our reason's soar'd too high. W—n.

2. It is used, in composition, for any thing mean or low, as bum-bailiff.

BUMBA'ILIFF. n. f. [from bum and bailiff.] A bailiff of the meanest kind, one that is employed in arrests.

Go, Sir Andrew, scout me for him at the corner of the orchard, like a bumbailiff. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

BU'MBARD. n. f. [wrong written for bombard; which see.] A great gun; a great barrel.

Yond same black cloud, yond huge one looks
Like a foul bumbard, that would shed his liquour
[illegible]

BU'MBAST. n. f. [falsely written for bombast; the etymology of which I am now very doubtful of; bombast and bombasine being mentioned, with great probability, by Junius, as coming from bom, a tree, and sein, silk, the silk or cotton of a tree.]

1. A cloth made by sewing one stuff upon another; patchwork.

The usual bumbast of black bits sewed into ermine, our English women are made to think very fine. Grew.

2. Linen stuffed with cotton, stuffing.

We have received your letters full of love,
And, in our maiden council, rated them
As courtship, pleasant jest, and courtesy,
As bumbast, and as lining to the time Shakesp.

BUMP n. f. [perhaps from bum, as being prominent.] A swelling, a protuberance.

It had upon its brow a bump as big as a young cockrel's stone, a perilous knock, and it cried bitterly. Shakesp. Rem. and Jul.

Not though his teeth are beaten out, his eyes
Hang by a string, in bumps his forehead rise. Dryden's Juv.

To BUMP. v. n. [from bombus, Lat.] To make a loud noise, or bomb. [See BOMB.] It is applied, I think, only to the bittern.

Then to the water's brink she laid her head,
And as a bittour bumps within a reed,
To thee alone, O lake, she said —— Dryden.

BU'MPER n. f. [from bump.] A cup filled till the liquour swells over the brims.

Places his delight
All day in playing bumpers, and at night
Reels to the bawds. Dryden's Juv. sat vii.

BU'MPKIN. n. f. [This word is of uncertain etymology; Henshaw derives it from pumpion, a kind of worthless gourd, or melon. This seems harsh. Bump is used amongst us for a knob, or lump; may not bumpkin be much the same with [illegible] pate, loggerhead, block, and blockhead.] An awkward heavy rustick; a country lout.

The poor bumpkin, that has never seen nor heard of such delights before, blessed herself at the change of her condition
L'Estrange's Fable

A heavy bumpkin, taught with daily care,
Can never dance three steps with a becoming air. Dryden

In his white cloak the magistrate appears,
The country bumpkin the same livery wears Dryden.

It was a favour to admit them to breeding, they might be ignorant bumpkins and clowns, if they pleased Locke.

BU'MPKINLY. adj. [from bumpkin.] Having the manners or appearance of a clown; clownish.

He is a simple, blundering, and yet conceited fellow, who, aiming at description, and the ruffick wonderful, gives an air of bumpkinly romance to all he tells. Clarissa.

BUNCH n. f. [buncker, Danish, the crags of the mountains.]

1. A hard lump; a knob.

They will carry their treasures upon the bunches of camels, to a people that shall not profit them. Isa. xxx 6

He felt the ground, which he had wont to find even and soft, to be grown hard with little round balls or bunches, like hard boiled eggs.

2. A cluster, many of the same kind growing together

Vines, with crisped bunches growing. Shakesp. Tempest.

Titian said, that he knew no better rule for the disposing of the lights and shadows, than his observations drawn from a bunch of grapes. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

For thee, large bunches load the bending vine,
And the last blessings of the year are thine Dryden.

3. A number of things tied together.

And on his arms a bunch of keys he bore. Fairy Q. b. i.

Alas! I know not what ye call all, but if I fought not with fifty of them, I am a bunch of radishes

Ancient Janus, with his double face,
And bunch of keys, the porter of the place. Dryden.

The mother's bunch of keys, or any thing they cannot hurt themselves with, serves to divert little children. Locke.

4. Any thing bound into a knot.

Upon the top of all his lofty crest,
A bunch of hairs discolour'd diversly,
With sprinkled pearl and gold full richly drest Fairy Q. b. i.

To BUNCH. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell out in a bunch, to grow out in protuberances.

It has the resemblance of a large champignon before it is opened, bunching out into a large round knob at one end
Woodward on Fossils

BUNCHBA'CKED. adj. [from bunch and back.] Having bunches on the back

The day shall come, that thou shalt wish for me,
To help thee curse this poisonous bunch-back'd toad. Shakesp.

BU'NCHINESS n. f. [from bunchy.] The quality of being bunchy, or growing in bunches.

BU[illegible] adj. [from bunch.] Growing into bunches; knotty.

He is more especially distinguished from other birds, by his bunchy tail, and the shortness of his legs. Grew's Museum.

BUNDLE. n. f. [byndle, Sax. from bynd.]

1. A number of things bound together

As to the bundles of petitions in parliament, they were, for the most part, petitions of private persons. Hale's Law of Engl.

Try, lads, can you this bundle break.
Then bids the youngest of the six
Take up a well-bound heap of sticks. Swift.

In the north, they bind them up in small bundles, and make small ricks of them. Mortimer's Husbandry

2. A roll; any thing rolled up cylindrically

She carried a great bundle of Flanders lace under her arm; but finding herself overloaden, she dropped the good man, and brought away the bundle Spectator, N° 494.

To BU'NDLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To tie in a bundle; to tie together; with up.

We ought to put things together, as well as we can, doctrine rough, but, after all, several things will not be bundled up together, under our terms and ways of speaking. Locke.

See how the double nation lies,
Like a rich coat with skirts of friz
As if a man, in making posies,
Should bundle thistles up with roses. Swift.

BUNG n. f. [bung, Welch.] A stopple for a barrel.

After three nights are expired, the next morning pull out the bung stick, or plug. Mortimer

To BUNG v. a. [from the noun.] To stop; to close up.

Greno's Coſmography in Sacro, b. [illegible]

BY-INTEREST. n. ſ. Intereſt diſtinct from that of the publick.

Various factions and parties, all aiming at by-intereſts, without any ſincere regard to the publick good Atterbury.

BY-LAW n. ſ.

By-laws are orders made in court-leets, or court-barons, by common aſſent, for the good of thoſe that make them, farther than the publick law binds. Cowel.

There was alſo a law, to reſtrain the by-laws and ordinances of corporations. Bacon's Henry VII.

In the beginning of this record is inſerted the law or inſtitution, to which are added two by-laws, as a comment upon the general law. Addiſon. Spectator, N° 608.

BY-MATTER. n. ſ. Something incidental.

I knew one, that, when he wrote a letter, he would put that which was moſt material into the poſtſcript, as if it had been a by-matter. Bacon's Eſſays, N° 23.

BY-NAME. n. ſ. A nickname; name of reproach, or accidental appellation.

Robert, eldeſt ſon to the Conqueror, uſed ſhort hoſe, and thereupon was by-named Court hoſe, and ſhewed firſt the uſe of them to the Engliſh. Camden's Remains.

BY-PAST. adj. Paſt, a term of the Scotch dialect.

Wars, peſtilences, and diſeaſes, have not been fewer for theſe three hundred years by-paſt, than ever they have been ſince we have had records. Cheyne's Philoſophical Principles.

BY-PATH. n. ſ. A private or obſcure path.

Heav'n knows, my ſon,
By what by-paths, and indirect crooked ways,
I got this crown. Shakeſp. Henry IV. p. II.

BY-RESPECT. n. ſ. Private end or view

It may be, that ſome, upon by-reſpects, find ſomewhat friendly uſage in uſance, at ſome of their hands.
Carew's Survey of Cornwal.

The archbiſhops and biſhops, next under the king, have the government of the church: be not you the mean to prefer any to thoſe places, for any by-reſpects, but only for their learning, gravity, and worth. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

Auguſtus, who was not altogether ſo good as he was wiſe, had ſome by-reſpects in the enacting of this law, for to do any thing for nothing, was not his maxim.
Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

BY-ROAD. n. ſ. An obſcure unfrequented path.

Through ſlipp'ry by-roads, dark and deep,
They often climb, and often creep. Swift.

BY-ROOM. n. ſ. A private room within another.

The by-standers asked him, why he ran away, his bread being weight? That was more than I knew, says he. Locke

BY-STREET. n. s. An obscure street.

The broker here his spacious beaver wears,
Upon his brow sit jealousies and cares;
Bent on some mortgage, to avoid reproach,
He seeks by-street, and saves the expensive coach.
Gay's Trivia.

BY VIEW. n. s. Private self-interested purpose.

No by-views of his own shall mislead him Atterbury.

BY-WALK. n. s. A private walk; not the main road.

All which he moves afterwards in by-walks, or under-plots, as diversions to the main design, lest it should grow tedious; though they are still naturally joined. Dryden.

The chief avenue ought to be the most ample and noble, but there should be by-walks, to retire into sometimes, for ease and refreshment. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

BY-WAY. n. s. A private and obscure way.

Night stealths are commonly driven in by-ways, and by blind fords, unused of any but such like. Spenser on Ireland.

Other by-ways he himself betook,
Where never foot of living wight did tread.
Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. 1. cant vii. stanz. 50.

Wholly abstain, or wed thy beauteous Lord
Allows thee choice of paths; take no by-ways,
But gladly welcome what he doth afford,
Not grudging that thy lust hath bounds and stays. Herbert.

A servant, or a favourite, if he be in want, and no other apparent cause of esteem, is commonly thought but a by-way to close corruption. Bacon's Essays, N° 11.

This is wonderfully diverting to the understanding, thus to receive a precept, that enters, as it were, through a by-way, and to apprehend an idea that draws a whole train after it.
Addison's Essay on the Georgicks.

BY-WEST. Westward; to the west of Whereupon grew that by-word, used by the Irish, that they dwelt by-west the law, which dwelt beyond the river of the Barrow. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

BY WORD. n. s. A saying; a proverb.

Duke of York, be king,
And bashful Henry be deposed; whose cowardice
Hath made us by-words to our enemies.
Shakesp. Henry VI. p. 1.

I knew a wise man, that had it for a by-word, when he saw men hasten to a conclusion, Stay a little, that we may make an end the sooner Bacon's Essays, N° 26

We are become a by-word among the nations for our ridiculous feuds and animosities. Addison's Freeholder, N° 50

It will be his lot often, to look singular, in loose and licentious times, and to become a by-word and a reproach, on that account, among the men of wit and pleasure. Atterbury.

CABBAGE. n. ſ. [caboc, Fr. braſſica, Lat.] A plant.

The leaves are large, fleſhy, and of a glaucous colour, the flowers conſiſt of four leaves, which are ſucceeded by long taper pods, containing ſeveral round acrid ſeeds. The ſpecies are, 1. The common white cabbage. 2. The red cabbage. 3. The Ruſſian cabbage. 4. The flat-ſided cabbage. 5. The ſugar loaf cabbage. 6. The early Batterſea cabbage. 7. The white Savoy cabbage. 8. The green Savoy cabbage. 9. The borecole. 10. The green broccoli. 11. The Italian broccoli. 12. The turnep-rooted cabbage. 13. The cauliflower. 14. The turnep cabbage. 15. Curled colewort. 16. The muſk cabbage. 17. Branching tree cabbage, from the ſea coaſt. 18. Brown broccoli. 19. Common colewort. 20. Perennial Alpine colewort. 21. Perfoliated with cabbage, with a white flower. 22. Perfoliated cabbage, with a purple flower. The common white, red, flat, and long-ſided cabbages, are chiefly cultivated for winter uſe, the ſeeds of which muſt be ſown in the middle of March, in beds of good freſh earth. The Ruſſian cabbage was formerly in much greater eſteem than at preſent, and is rarely brought to the market. The early Batterſea and ſugar-loaf cabbages, are called Michaelmas cabbages, the ſeaſon for ſowing them is in the middle of July, in an open ſpot of ground. The Savoy cabbage are propagated for winter uſe, as being generally eſteemed the better, when pinched by froſt. The borecole is never eaten till the froſt has rendered it tender. The turnep cabbage was formerly more cultivated in England than at preſent, and ſome eſteem this kind for ſoups, but it is generally too ſtrong, and ſeldom good, except in hard winters. The curled colewort is more generally eſteemed, and is fit for uſe after Chriſtmas, and continues good until April. The muſk cabbage has, through negligence, been almoſt loſt in England, though, for eating, it is one of the beſt kinds we have; for it is always looſer, and the leaves more criſp and tender, and has a moſt agreeable muſky ſcent when cut. It will be fit for uſe in October, November, and December. The branching ſea cabbage is found wild in England, and on the ſea coaſt, and is ſometimes gathered by the poor inhabitants in the ſpring, and eaten; but it is apt to be ſtrong and bitter. The brown broccoli [illegible] many eſteemed, though it does not deſerve a place [illegible] garden, where the Roman broccoli can be obtained, which is much ſweeter, and will continue longer in ſeaſon. The Roman broccoli has large heads, which appear in the center of the plants like cluſters of buds. The heads ſhould be cut before they run up to ſeed, with about four or five inches of the ſtems; the ſkin of theſe ſtems ſhould be ſtripped off, before they are boiled; they will eat very tender, and little inferiour to aſparagus. The common colewort is now almoſt loſt near London, where their markets are uſually ſupplied with cabbage or Savoy plants inſtead of them; which, being tenderer and more delicate, are better worth cultivating. The perennial Alpine colewort is alſo little cultivated at preſent. The other two ſorts of wild cabbage are varieties fit for a botanick garden, but are plants of no uſe. The cauliflowers have, of late years, been ſo far improved in England, as to exceed, in goodneſs and magnitude, what are produced in moſt parts of Europe; and, by the ſkill of the gardiners, are continued for ſeveral months together; but the moſt common ſeaſon for them is in May, June, and July. Miller.

Cole, cabbage, and coleworts, which are ſoft and demulcent, without any acidity; the jelly, or juice, of red cabbage, baked in an oven, and mixed with honey, is an excellent pectoral. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To CA'BBAGE. v. a. [a cant word among taylors.] To ſteal in cutting clothes.

Your taylor, inſtead of ſhreds, cabbages whole yards of cloth. Arbuthnot's Hiſtory of J. Bull.

CA'BBAGE TREE. n. ſ. A ſpecies of palm-tree, which ſee.

It is very common in the Caribee iſlands, where it grows to a prodigious height. The leaves of this tree envelope each other, ſo that thoſe which are incloſed, being deprived of the air, are blanched, which is the part the inhabitants cut for plaits for hats, &c. and the genuine, or young ſhoots, are pickled, and ſent into England by the name of cabbage, but whenever this part is cut out, the trees are deſtroyed; nor do they riſe again from the old roots; ſo that there are very few trees left remaining near plantations, except for ornament; for their ſtems being exceeding ſtraight, and their leaves being produced very regularly at top, will afford a moſt beautiful proſpect, for which reaſon, the planters generally ſpare two or three of them near their habitations. Miller.

CABIN. n. ſ. [cabane, Fr. chaſm, Welch, a cottage.]

1. A ſmall room.

CA'BLE. n. ſ. [cabl, Welch, cabel, Dutch.] The great rope of a ſhip to which the anchor is faſtened.

What though the maſt be now blown overboard,
The cable broke, the holding anchor loſt,
And half our ſailors ſwallow'd in the flood,
Yet lives our pilot ſtill? Shakeſp. Henry VI.

That the length of the cable is the life of the ſhip in all extremities; and the reaſon is, becauſe it makes ſo many bendings and waves, as the ſhip, riding at that length, is not able to ſtretch it; and nothing breaks that is not ſtretched. Raleigh's Eſſays.

The cables crack, the ſailors fearful cries
Aſcend, and ſable night involves the ſkies. Dryden.

See whether a cage can please a bird? or whether a dog grow not fiercer with tying? Sidney.

He taught me how to know a man in love; in which cage of rushes, I am sure, you are not a prisoner.
Shakesp. As you like it.

Though slaves, like birds that sing not in a cage,
They lost their genius, and poetick rage;
Homers again and Pindars may be found,
And his great actions with their numbers crown'd. Waller.
And parrots, imitating human tongue,
And singing birds in silver cages hung.
And every fragrant flower, and odorous green,
Were sorted well, with lumps of amber laid between.
Dryden's Fables.

A man recurs to our fancy, by remembering his garment, a beast, bird, or fish, by the cage, or court-yard, or cistern, wherein it was kept. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

The reason why so few marriages are happy, is, because young ladies spend their time in making nets, not in making cages. Swift's Thoughts on various Subjects.

2. A place for wild beasts, inclosed with pallisadoes.
3. A prison for petty malefactors.

To CAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose in a cage.

CAITIFF. n. s. [cattivo, Ital. a slave; whence it came to signify a bad man, with some imputation of meanness; as knave in English, and fur in Latin, so certainly does slavery destroy virtue.

Ἥμισυ γὰρ ἀρετῆς ἀποαίνυται εὐρὺ ἄνακτα Δοῦλον ἐόντα. Homer.

A slave and a scoundrel are signified by the same words in many languages.] A mean villain; a despicable knave.

The caitiff, vassal of dread and despair,
Unworthy of the common breathed air,
Why livest thou, dead dog, a longer day,
And dost not unto death thyself prepare? Fairy Queen, b. ii.

'Tis not impossible
But one, the wickedest caitiff on the ground,
May seem as shy, as grave, as just, as absolute,
As Angelo. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

The wretched caitiff, all alone,
As he believed, began to moan,
And tell his story to himself. Hudibras, [illegible]

CAKE. n. s. [cuch, Teutonick.]
1. A kind of delicate bread.

You must be seeing christenings? do you look for ale and [illegible]

My cake is dough, but I'll in among the rest,

This burning matter, as it sunk very leisurely, had time to cake together, and form the bottom, which covers the mouth of that dreadful vault that lies underneath it. Addison on Italy.

This is that very Mab,
That plats the manes of horses in the night,
And cakes the elflocks in foul sluttish hairs,
Which, once entangled, much misfortune bodes. Shakesp.

He rins'd the wound,
And wash'd away the strings and clotted blood,
That cak'd with it. Addison.

CALABA'SH Tree.

It hath a flower consisting of one leaf, divided at the brim into several parts; from whose cup rises the pointal, in the hinder part of the flower, which afterwards becomes a fleshy fruit, having an hard shell. They rise to the height of twenty-five or thirty feet in the West Indies, where they grow naturally in woods, and the savannas. The shells are used by the negroes for cups, as also for making instruments of musick, by making a hole in the shell, and putting in small stones, with which they make a sort of rattle. Miller.

CALAMANCO. n. s. [a word derived, probably by some accident, from calamancus, Lat. which, in the middle ages, signified a hat.] A kind of woollen stuff.

He was of a bulk and stature larger than ordinary, had a red coat, flung open to shew a calamanco waistcoat. Tatler, N° 96.

CA'LAMINE, or Lapis Calaminaris. n. s. A kind of fossile [illegible] minous earth, which, being mixed with copper, changes it into brass; it is dug in barren rocky ground, and is often found in lead mines, or has lead mixed with it. It is used as an absorbent and drier, in outward medicinal applications, but is seldom given inwardly.

We must not omit those, which, though not of so much beauty, yet are of greater use, viz. loadstones, whetstones of all kinds, limestones, calamine, or lapis calaminaris. Locke.

CA'LAMINT. n. s. [calaminthe, Lat.] The name of a plant.

It hath a long tubulous flower, which opens at the top into two lips, the upper lip is roundish, and divided into two segments: these flowers are produced from the joints of the stalks, at the footstalks of the leaves, in bunches, upon pretty long pedicles, or footstalks. This plant grows wild, and is used in medicine. Miller.

1. Miserable; involved in distress, oppressed with infelicity; unhappy, wretched; applied to men.

This is a gracious provision God Almighty hath made in favour of the necessitous and calamitous, the state of some, in this life, being so extremely wretched and deplorable, if compared with others. Calamy.

2. Full of misery; distressful; applied to external circumstances.

What calamitous effects the air of this city wrought upon us the last year, you may read in my discourse of the plague. Harvey on Consumptions.

[illegible]
Subdues me, and calamitous constraint
Left on my head both sin and punishment,
However insupportable, be all
Devolv'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 132.

Much rather I shall chuse
To live the poorest in my tribe, than richest,
And be in that calamitous prison left. Milton's Agonistes.

In this sad and calamitous condition, deliverance from an oppressour would have even revived them. South.

CALA'MITOUSNESS. n. s. [from calamitous.] Misery, distress.

CALA'MITY n. s. [calamitas, Lat.] Misfortune; cause of misery, distress.

Another ill accident is drought, and the spindling of the corn, which with us is rare, but in hotter countries common, insomuch as the word calamity was first derived from calamus, when the corn could not get out of the stalk. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Which infinite calamity shall cause
To human life, and houshold peace confound. Par. L. b. x.

From adverſe ſhores in ſafety let her hear
Foreign calamity, and diſtant war;
Of which, great heav'n, let her no portion bear. Prior.

CA'LAMUS. n. ſ. [Lat.] A ſort of reed or ſweet ſcented wood, mentioned in ſcripture with the other ingredients of the ſacred perfumes. It is a knotty root, reddiſh without, and white within, which puts forth long and narrow leaves, and brought from the Indies. The prophets ſpeak of it as a foreign commodity of great value. Theſe ſweet reeds have no ſmell when they are green, but when they are dry only. Their form differs not from other reeds, and their ſmell is perceived upon entering the marſhes. Calmet.

Take thou alſo unto thee principal ſpices of pure myrrh, of ſweet cinnamon, and of ſweet calamus. Exodus, xxx. 23.

CALA'SH. n. ſ. [calèche, Fr.] A ſmall carriage of pleaſure.

To CA'LCINATE. See To CALCINE.

CALCINA'TION. n. ſ. [from calcine; calcination, Fr.] Such a management of bodies by fire, as renders them reducible to powder, wherefore it is called chymical pulverization. This is the next degree of the power of fire beyond that of fuſion, for when fuſion is longer continued, not only the more ſubtile particles of the body itſelf fly off, but the particles of fire alſo inſinuate themſelves in ſuch multitudes, and are ſo blended through its whole ſubſtance, that the fluidity, firſt cauſed by the fire, can no longer ſubſiſt. From this union ariſes a third kind of body, which, being very porous and brittle, is eaſily reduced to powder, for, the fire having penetrated everywhere into the pores of the body, the particles are both hindered from mutual contact, and divided into minute atoms. Quincy.

Divers reſidences of bodies are wont to be thrown away, as ſoon as the diſtillation or calcination of the body that yielded them is ended. Boyle.

This may be effected, but not without a calcination, or reducing it by art into a ſubtile powder. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CALCI'NATORY. n. ſ. [from calcinate.] A veſſel uſed in calcination.

To CALCINE. v. a. [calciner, Fr. from calx, Lat.]

1. To burn in the fire to a calx, or friable ſubſtance. See CALCINATION.

ng, by baking without melting, the heat hath theſe
, it indurateth, then maketh fragile, and, laſtly, it doth calcinate. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt. N° 87.

The ſolids ſeem to be earth, bound together with ſome of for if a bone be calcined, ſo as the leaſt force will crumble it, being immerſed in oil, it will grow firm again.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. T ry diſputes that union have calcin'd,
Almoſt as many minds as men we find. Denham.

To CALCINE. v. n. To become a calx by heat.

This cryſtal is a pellucid brittle ſtone, clear as water, and without colour, enduring a red heat without loſing its tranſparency, and, in a very ſtrong heat, calcining without fuſion.
Newton's Opticks.

To CA'LCULATE. v. a. [calculer, Fr. from calculus, Lat. a little ſtone or bead, uſed in operations of numbers.]

1. To compute, to reckon.
2. To compute the ſituation of the planets at any certain time.

A cunning man did calculate my birth,
And told me, that by water I ſhould die. Shakeſp. Hen. VI.

Why all theſe fires, why all theſe gliding ghoſts,
Why old men fools, and children calculate,
Why all thoſe things change from their ordinance?
Shakeſp. Julius Cæſ.

Who were there then in the world, to obſerve the births of thoſe firſt men, and calculate their nativities, as they ſprawled out of ditches? Bentley.

3. To adjuſt; to project for any certain end.

The reaſonableneſs of religion clearly appears, as it tends ſo directly to the happineſs of men, and is, upon all accounts, calculated for our benefit. Tillotſon.

CALCULA'TION. n. ſ. [from calculate.]

Cypher, that great friend to calculation, or rather, which changeth calculation, unto eaſy computation. Holder on Time.

2. A reckoning, the reſult of arithmetical operation.

If then their calculation be true; for ſo they reckon. Hooker.

Being different from calculations of the ancients, their obſervations concern not ours. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CALCULA'TOR. n. ſ. [from calculate.] A computer, a reckoner.

CALCULATORY. adj. [from calculate.] Belonging to calculation.

CA'LCULE. n. ſ. [calculus, Lat.] Reckoning, compute.

The general calcule, which was made in the laſt parliamentation, exceeded eight millions. Howel's Local Foreſt.

CA'LCULOSE. } adj. [from calculus, Lat.] Stony, gritty.
CA'LCULOUS. }

The volatile ſalt of urine will coagulate ſpirits of wine; and thus, perhaps, the ſtones, or calculoſe concretions in the kidney or bladder, may be produced. Brown's Vulgar Err.

I have found, by opening the kidneys of a calculous perſon, that the ſtone is formed earlier than I have ſuggeſted. Sharp.

CA'LCULUS. n. ſ. [Latin.] The ſtone in the bladder.

CALDRON. n. ſ. [chaudron, Fr. from caudus, Lat.] A pot; boiler, a kettle.

In the midſt of all
There placed was a caldron wide and tall,
Upon a mighty furnace, burning hot. Fairy Queen, b.

Some ſtrip the ſkin, ſome portion out the ſpoil,
The limbs, yet trembling, in the caldrons boil.
Dryden's Æn.

In the late eruptions, this great hollow was like a vaſt caldron, filled with glowing and melted matter, which, as it boiled over in any part, ran down the ſides of the mountain.
Addiſon's Remarks on Italy.

To CA'LEFY. v. n. [calefio, Latin.] To grow hot, to be heated.

Cryſtal will calefy into electricity, that is, a power to attract ſtraws, or light bodies, and convert the needle, freely placed. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 1.

CA'LENDAR. n. ſ. [calendarium, Lat.] A regiſter of the year, in which the months, and ſtated times, are marked, as feſtivals and holidays.

What hath this day deſerv'd? what hath it done,
That it in golden letters ſhould be ſet
Among the high tides, in the calendar? Shakeſp. K. John.

We compute from calendars differing from one another, the compute of the one anſwering that of the other.
Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 12.

Curs'd be the day when firſt I did appear;
Let it be blotted from the calendar,
Leſt it pollute the month. Dryden's Fab.

To CA'LENDER. v. a. [calendrer, Fr. Skinner.] To preſs cloth, to lay the nap of cloth ſmooth.

CALENTURE. n. ſ. [from caleo, Lat.] A diſtemper peculiar to ſailors, in hot climates, wherein they imagine the ſea to be green fields, and will throw themſelves into it, if not reſtrained.

And for that lethargy was there no cure,
But to be caſt into a calenture.
So, by a calenture miſled,
The mariner with rapture ſees,
On the ſmooth ocean's azure bed,
Enamel'd fields, and verdant trees,
With eager haſte, he longs to rove
In that fantaſtic ſcene, and thinks
It muſt be ſome enchanted grove,
And in he leaps, and down he ſinks. Swift.

CALF. n. ſ. calves in the plural. [ceal̄f, Saxon, kalf, Dutch.]

1. The young of a cow.

CALM. adj. [calme, Fr. kalm, Dutch.]

1. Quiet; serene, not stormy, not tempestuous; applied to the elements.

Calm was the day, and, through the trembling air,
Sweet breathing Zephyrus did softly play
A gentle spirit, that lightly did allay
Hot Titan's beams, which then did glister fair. Spenser.

2. Undisturb'd, unruffled; applied to the passions.

It is no ways congruous, that God should be frightning men into truth, who were made to be wrought upon by calm evidence, and gentle methods of persuasion. Atterbury.

The queen her speech with calm attention hears,
Her eyes restrain the silver-streaming tears. Pope's Odyssey.

CALM n. s.

1. Serenity; stillness; freedom from violent motion.

It seemeth most agreeable to reason, that the waters rather stood in a quiet calm, than that they moved with any raging or overbearing violence. Raleigh's History of the World.

Every pilot
Can steer the ship in calms, but he performs
The skilful part, can manage it in storms. Denham's Sophy.

Nor God alone in the still calm we find,
He mounts the storm, and walks upon the wind. Pope.

2. Freedom from disturbance, quiet, repose, applied to the passions.

Great and strange calms usually portend the most violent storms: and therefore, since storms and calms do always follow one another, certainly, of the two, it is much more eligible to have the storm first, and the calm afterwards: since a calm before a storm is commonly a peace of a man's own making; but a calm after a storm, a peace of God's. South.

To CALM v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To still; to quiet.

Neptune we find busy in the beginning of the Æneas, to calm the tempest raised by Æolus. Dryden.

CA'MEL. n. s. [camelus, Lat.] An animal very common in Arabia, Judea, and the neighbouring countries. One sort is large, and full of flesh, and fit to carry burdens of a thousand pounds weight, having one bunch upon its back. Another have two bunches upon their backs, like a natural saddle, and are fit either for burdens, or men to ride on. A third kind is leaner, and of a smaller size, called dromedaries, because of their swiftness; which are generally used for riding by men of quality. See DROMEDARY.

Camels have large round feeet, but not hard; in the spring, their hair falls entirely off, in less than three days time, when the flies are extremely uneasy to them. Camels, it is said, will continue ten or twelve days without eating or drinking, and keep water a long time in their stomach, for their refreshment. It is reported, that nature has furnished them, for this purpose, with a very large ventricle, with many bags closed within the coats of it, round about it, for reserving the water. But the Jesuits in China, where they dissected several camels, found no such bags. When a camel is upon a journey, his master follows him, singing and whistling; and the louder he sings, the better the camel goes. The flesh of camels is served up at the best tables, among the Arabians, Persians, and other eastern nations; but the use of it was forbid the Hebrews, they being ranked by Moses among the unclean creatures, Deut. xiv. 7. Calmet.

Patient of thirst and toil,
Son of the desart! even the camel feels,
Shot through his wither'd heart, the fiery blast. Thomson.

CAME'LOPARD. n. s. [from camelus and pardus, Lat.] An Abyssinian animal, taller than an elephant, but not so thick. He is so named, because he has a neck and head like a camel; he is spotted like a pard, but his spots are white upon a red ground. The Italians call him giaraffa. Trevoux.

Give me the cups:
And let the kettle to the trumpets speak,
The trumpets to the cannoniers without,
The cannons to the heav'ns, the heav'ns to earth. Shakesp.

A third was a most excellent cannonier, whose good skill did much endamage the forces of the king. Hayward.

CA'NNOT. A word compounded of can and not.

I cannot but believe many a child can tell twenty, long before he has any idea of infinity at all. Locke.

CANO'A. } n. f. A boat made by cutting the trunk of a tree into CA'NOE. } a hollow vessel.

Others made rafts of wood, and others devised the boat of one tree, called the canoa, which the Gauls, upon the river Rosn, used in assisting the transportation of Hannibal's army. Raleigh's Essays.

They maintained a war against Semiramis, in which they had four thousand monoxyla, or canoes, of one piece of timber Arbuthnot on Coins.

CANON n. f. [κανων.]

1. A rule; a law.

The truth is, they are rules and canons of that law, which is written in all mens hearts; the church had for ever, no less than now, stood bound to observe them, whether the [illegible] had mentioned them, or no. Hooker, b. [illegible]

His books are almost the very canon to judge both doctrine and discipline by Hooker, Pref.

Religious canons, civil laws are cruel,
Then what should war be? Shakesp. [illegible]

Canons in logick are such as these. every part of a division, singly taken, must contain less than the whole; and a definition must be peculiar and proper to the thing defined.
Watts's Logick.

2. The laws made by ecclesiastical councils.

Canon law is that law, which is made and ordained in a general council, or provincial synod of the church. Ayliffe.

These were looked on as lapsed persons, and great severities of penance were prescribed them, as appears by the canons of Ancyra, and many others. Stil[illegible]

3. The books of Holy Scripture, or the great rule.

Canon also denotes those books of Scripture, which are received as inspired and canonical, to distinguish them from other profane, apocryphal, or disputed books. Thus we say, that Genesis is part of the sacred canon of the Scripture. Ayliffe.

4. A dignitary in cathedral churches.

For deans and canons, or prebends, of cathedral churches, in their first institution, they were of great use in the church, they were to be of counsel with the bishop for his revenue, and for his government in causes ecclesiastical. Bacon.

Swift much admires the place and air,
And longs to be a canon there.
A canon! that's a place too mean:
No, doctor, you shall be a dean,
Two dozen canons round your shall,
And you the tyrant o'er them all. Sw[illegible]

5. Canons Regular. Such as are placed in monasteries. Ayliffe.
6. Canons Secular. Lay canons, who have been, as a mark of honour, admitted into some chapters.

There are also, in popish countries, women which they call secular canonesses, living after the example of secular canons. [illegible]

CANO'NICAL. adj [canonicus, low Lat.]

1. According to the canon.
2. Constituting the canon.

Publick readings there are of books and writings, not canonical, whereby the church doth also preach, or openly make known the doctrine of virtuous conversation. Hooker, b. [illegible]

No such book was found amongst those canonical scriptures.
Raleigh's History of the World.

3. Regular, stated; fixed by ecclesiastical laws.

Seven times in a day do I praise thee, said David; from this definite number some ages of the church took their pattern for their canonical hours. Ta[illegible]

4. Spiritual; ecclesiastical, relating to the church.

York anciently had a metropolitan jurisdiction over all the bishops of Scotland, from whom they had their consecration, and to whom they swore canonical obedience. Ayliffe.

CANO'NICALLY. adv. [from canonical.] In a manner agreeable to the canon.

It is a known story of the friar, who, on a fasting day, bids his capon be carp, and then very canonically eat it
Government of the Tongue.

CANO'NICALNESS. n. f. [from canonical.] The quality of being canonical.

CANONIST. n. f. [from canon.] A man versed in the ecclesiastical laws; a professour of the canon law.

John Fisher, bishop of Rochester, when the king would have translated him from that poor bishoprick, he refused, saying, he would not forsake his poor little old wife, thinking of the fifteenth canon of the Nicene council, and that of the canonists, Matrimonium inter episcopum & ecclesiam esse contractum, &c.
Camden's Remains.

Of whose strange crimes no canonist can tell,
In what commandment's large contents they dwell. Pope.

CANONIZA'TION. n. f. [from canonize.] The act of declaring any man a saint.

It is very suspicious, that the interests of particular families, or churches, have too great a sway in their canonizations.
Addison on Italy.

To CA'NONIZE v. a. [from canon, to put into the canon, or rule for observing festivals.] To declare any man a saint.

The king, desirous to bring into the house of Lancaster celestial honour, became suitor to pope Julius, to canonize king Henry VI. for a saint. Bacon's Henry VII.

By those hymns all shall approve
Us canonized for love. Donne.

They have a pope too, who hath the chief care of religion, and of canonizing whom he thinks fit, and thence have the honour of saints. Stillingfleet.

CA'NONRY. } n. f. [from canon.] An ecclesiastical benefice in Birds that are most canorous, and whose notes we most commend, are of little throats, and short. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CANT. n. f. [probably from cantus, Lat. implying the odd tone of voice used by vagrants; but imagined by some to be corrupted from quaint.]

1. A corrupt dialect used by beggars and vagabonds
2. A particular form of speaking peculiar to some certain class or body of men.

I write not always in the proper terms of navigation, land-service, or in the cant of any profession. Dryden.

If we would trace out the original of that flagrant and avowed impiety, which has prevailed among us for some years, we should find, that it owes its rise to that cant and hypocrisy, which which had taken poſſeſſion of the people's minds in the times of the great rebellion. Addiſon. Freeholder, N° 37.

Aſtrologers, with an old paltry cant, and a few pot-hooks for planets, to amuſe the vulgar, have too long been ſuffered to abuſe the world. Swift's Predictions for the Year 1701.

A few general rules, with a certain cant of words, has ſometimes ſet up an illiterate heavy writer, for a moſt judicious and formidable critick. Addiſon. Spectator, N° 291

3. A whining pretenſion to goodneſs, in formal and affected terms.

Of promiſe prodigal, while pow'r you want,
And preaching in the ſelf-denying cant Dryden's Aurengz.

4. Barbarous jargon.

The affectation of ſome late authours, to introduce and multiply cant words, is the moſt ruinous corruption in any language. Swift.

5 Auction.

Numbers of theſe tenants, or their deſcendants, are now offering to ſell their leaſes by cant, even thoſe which were for lives. Swift.

To CANT. v. n. [from the noun.] To talk in the jargon of particular profeſſions, or in any kind of formal affected language, or with a peculiar and ſtudied tone of voice.

Men cant endleſsly about materia and forma, hunt chimeras by rules of art, or dreſs up ignorance in words of bulk or ſound, which may ſtop up the mouth of enquiry.

That uncouth affected garb of ſpeech, or canting language rather, if I may ſo call it, which they have of late taken up, is the ſignal diſtinction and characteriſtical note of that, which, in that their new language, they call the godly party. Sanderſon.

The buſy, ſubtile ſerpents of the law,
Did firſt my mind from true obedience draw;
While I did limits to the king preſcribe,
And took for oracles that canting tribe. Roſcommon.

Unſkill'd in ſchemes by planets to foreſhow,
Like canting raſcals, how the wars will go. Dryden's Juven.

How dare I think such glory to attain?
These that have it attain'd, were in like case,
Quoth he, as wretched, and liv'd in like pain. Fairy Queen.

Question your royal thoughts, make the case yours,
Be now a father, and propose a son. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. ii.

Some knew the face,
And all had heard the much lamented case. Dryden.

These were the circumstances under which the Corinthians then were, and the argument which the apostle advances, is intended to reach their particular case. Atterbury.

My youth may be made, as it never fails in executions, a case of compassion. Pope's Preface to his Works.

2. State of things.

He saith, that if there can be found such an inequality between man and man, as there is between man and beast, or between soul and body, it investeth a right of government, which seemeth rather an impossible case, than an untrue sentence Bacon's Holy War.

Here was the case, an army of English, wasted and tired with a long winter's siege, engaged an army of a greater number than themselves, fresh and in vigour. Bacon.

I can but be a slave where-ever I am; so that taken or not taken, 'tis all a case to me. L'Estrange.

They are excellent in order to certain ends; he hath no need to use them, as the case now stands, being provided for with the provision of an angel. Taylor's Holy Living.

Your parents did not produce you much into the world, whereby you have fewer ill impressions, but they failed, as is generally the case, in too much neglecting to cultivate your mind. Swift.

3. In physick; state of the body.

It was well; for we had rather met with calms and contrary winds, than any tempests; for our sick were many, and in very ill case. Bacon.

Chalybeate water seems to be a proper remedy in hypochondriacal cases Arbuthnot on Aliments.

4. In ludicrous language, condition with regard to leanness, or health.

Thou liest, most ignorant monster, I am in case to justle a constable. Shakesp. Tempest.

Pray have but patience till then, and when I am in little better case, I'll throw myself in the very mouth of you. L'Estr.

Quoth Ralph, I should not, if I were
In case for action, now be here. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. iii.

For if the sire be faint, or out of case,
He will be copy'd in his famish'd race. Dryden's Virgil.

The priest was pretty well in case,
And shew'd some humour in his face,
Look'd with an easy careless mien,
A perfect stranger to the spleen. Swift

5. Contingence.

The atheist, in case things should fall out contrary to his belief or expectation, hath made no provision for this case; if, contrary to his confidence, it should prove in the issue that there is a God, the man is lost and undone for ever. Tillotson.

6. Question relating to particular persons or things.

Well do I find each man most wise in his own case. Sidney.

It is strange, that the ancient fathers should not appeal to this judge, in all cases, it being so short and expedite a way for the ending of controversies. Tillotson.

7. Representation of any fact or question.

If he be not apt to beat over matters, and to call up one thing, to prove and illustrate another, let him study the lawyers cases. So every defect of the mind may have a special receipt. Bacon, Essay 51.

8. The variation of nouns.

The several changes which the noun undergoes in the Latin and Greek tongues, in the several numbers, are called cases, and are designed to express the several views or relations under which the mind considers things with regard to one another; and the variation of the noun for this purpose is called declension. Clark's Latin Grammar.

9. In case. [nel caso, Ital.] If it should happen; upon the supposition that: a form of speech now little used.

And puniſh'd him that put it in his way. Pope.

CASH-KEEPER n. ſ. [from caſh and keep.] A man entruſted with the money.

Diſpenſator was properly a caſh-keeper, or privy-purſe.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

CA'SHEWNUT. n. ſ. A tree.

The cup of the flower, which is produced at the extremity of a footſtalk, is oblong and quinqueſid, the flower conſiſts of one leaf, which is divided into five long narrow ſegments, in the bottom of the calyx is the ovary, which becomes a ſoft pear-ſhaped fruit, upon the apex of which grows a veſſel, in which is contained one kidney-ſhaped ſeed. This tree is very common in Jamaica and Barbadoes, where it grows very large, but in England will rarely ſtand through our winters. The inhabitants of the Weſt Indies plant them from branches taken from the old trees, which, with them, take root very well, and in two years time produce fruits. Miller.

CASHIER. n. ſ. [from caſh.] He that has charge of the money.

If a ſteward or caſhier be ſuffered to run on, without charging him to a reckoning, ſuch a ſort of forbearance will teach him to ſhuffle. South.

A Venetian, finding his ſon's expences grow very high, ordered his caſhier to let him have no more money than what he ſhould count when he received it. Locke.

Flight of caſhiers, or mobs, he'll never mind;
And knows no offices, while the muſe is kind. Pope.

To CASHIER. v. a. [caſſer, Fr. caſſare, Lat.]

1. To diſcard; to diſmiſs from a poſt, or a ſociety, with reproach.

Does 't not go well? Caſſio hath beaten thee,
And thou by that ſmall hurt haſt caſhier'd Caſſio. Shakeſp.

Seconds in factions many times prove principals, but many times alſo they prove cyphers, and are caſhiered. Pope.

If I had omitted what he ſaid, his thoughts and words being thus caſhiered in my hands, he had no longer been Lucretius. Dryden.

They have already caſhiered ſeveral of their followers as murderers. Addiſon's Freeholder.

The ruling rogue, who dreads to be caſhier'd,
Contrives, as he is hated, to be fear'd. Sir Fr.

2. It ſeems, in the following paſſages, to ſignify the ſame as to annul, to vacate, which is ſufficiently agreeable to the derivation.

If we ſhould find a father corrupting his ſon, or a mother her daughter, we muſt charge this upon a peculiar anomaly and baſeneſs of nature; if the name of nature may be allowed to that which ſeems to be utter caſhiering of it, and deviation from, and a contradiction to, the common principles of humanity. South.

Some, out of an overfondneſs of that darling invention, caſhier, or at leaſt endeavour to invalidate, all other arguments, and forbid us to hearken to thoſe proofs, as weak or falacious. Locke.

CASK. n. ſ. [caſque, Fr. cadus, Lat.]

1. A barrel, a wooden veſſel to ſtop up liquour or proviſions.

The patient turning himſelf abed, it makes a fluctuating kind of noiſe, like the rumbling of water in a caſk. Harvey.

Perhaps tomorrow he may change his wine,
And drink old ſparkling Alban, or Setine,
Whoſe title, and whoſe age, with mould o'ergrown,
The gond old caſk for ever keeps unknown.

2. It has caſk in a kind of plural ſenſe, to ſignify [illegible], or proviſion of caſks.

Great inconveniences grow by the bad caſk being commonly ſo ill ſeaſoned and conditioned, as that a great part of the beer is ever loſt and caſt away. Raleigh.

CASK. } n. ſ. [caſque, Fr. caſſis, Lat.] A helmet; armour for CASQUE. } the head; a poetical word.

Let thy blows, doubly redoubled,
Fall like amazing thunder on the caſque
Of thy pernicious enemy. Shakeſp. Richard II.

And theſe
Sling weighty ſtones, when from afar they fight
[illegible] Dryden.

What are his arms? why does he load with darts
His trembling hands, and cruſh beneath a caſk
His wrinkled brows? Addiſon's Cato.

CA'SKET n. ſ. [a diminutive of caſſe, a cheſt, Fr. caſſe, caſſette.]
A ſmall box or cheſt for jewels, or things of particular value.

O ignorant poor man! what doſt thou bear,
Lock'd up within the caſket of thy breaſt?
What jewels, and what riches haſt thou there?
What heav'nly treaſure in ſo weak a cheſt? Davies.

They found him dead, and caſt into the ſtreets,
An empty caſket, where the jewel, life,
By ſome damn'd hand was robb'd, and ta'en away. Shakeſp.

Mine eye hath found that ſad ſepulchral rock,
That was the caſket of heav'n's richeſt ſtore. Milton.

That had by chance pack'd up his choiceſt treaſure
In one dear caſket, and ſav'd only that. Otway's Ven. Preſerv.

This caſket India's glowing gems unlocks,
And all Arabia breathes from yonder box. Pope.

To CA'SKET v. a. [from the noun.] To put in a caſket.

I have writ my letters, caſketed my treaſure, and given order for our horſes. Shakeſp. All's well that ends well.

CASSAMUNA'IR. n. ſ. An aromatick vegetable, being a ſpecies of galangal, brought from the Eaſt, and highly valued as a nervous and ſtomachick ſimple. Quincy.

To CA'SSATE. v. a [caſſer, Fr. caſſare, low Lat.] To vacate; to ſhake; to make void, to nullify.

This opinion ſuperſedes and caſſates the beſt medium we have. Ray on the Creation.

CASSA'TION. n. ſ. [caſſatus, Lat.] A making null or void. D.

CA'SSAVI. } n. ſ. An American plant.
CA'SSADA. }

It has a ſhort ſpreading bell-ſhaped flower, conſiſting of one leaf, cut into ſeveral parts, whoſe pointal afterwards becomes a roundiſh fruit, compoſed of three cells joined together, each containing one oblong ſeed. To theſe notes ſhould be added, male flowers having no pointal, and which, growing round the [illegible] ſix: 1. The common caſſava, or caſſada. 2. The moſt prickly [illegible] ſava, with white flowers growing in umbels, and a ſtinging wolfsbane leaf. 4. Shrubby caſſava, without prickles, and ſmooth leaves, which are leſs divided, &c. The firſt ſort is cultivated in all the warm parts of America, where the root, after being divеſted of its milky juice, is ground to flour, and then made into cakes of bread. Of this there are two ſorts. The moſt common has purpliſh ſtalks, with the veins and leaves of a purpliſh colour; but the ſtalks of the other are green, and the leaves of a lighter green. The laſt ſort is not venomous, even when the roots are freſh and full of juice; which the negroes frequently dig up, roaſt, and eat, like potatoes, without any ill effects. The caſſada is propagated by cuttings, about fifteen or ſixteen inches long, taken from thoſe plants whoſe roots are grown to maturity. Theſe cuttings are planted by the Americans in their rainy ſeaſons, a foot or fourteen inches deep in the ground; and the land in which they are placed, muſt be well wrought. When the cuttings have taken root, they require no farther care than to be kept clear from weeds; and, in about eight or nine months, when grown to maturity, in good ground they will be as large as the calf of a man's leg, but commonly equal to the ſize of good parſneps. Miller.

CA'SSAWARE. See CASSIOWARY.

CA'SSIA. n. ſ. A ſweet ſpice mentioned by Moſes, Exod. xxx. 24. as an ingredient in the compoſition of the holy oil, which was to be made uſe of in the conſecration of the ſacred veſſels of the tabernacle. This aromatick is ſaid to be the bark of a tree very like cinnamon, and grows in the Indies without being cultivated. Calmet.

All thy garments ſmell of myrrh, aloes, and caſſia. Pſ. xlv. 8.

CA'SSIA. n. ſ. The name of a tree.

It hath a cylindrical, long, taper, or flat pod, divided into many cells by tranſverſe diaphragms; in each of which is contained one hard ſeed, lodged, for the moſt part, in a clammy black ſubſtance, which is purgative. The flowers have five leaves, diſpoſed orbicularly. The ſpecies are nine; 1. The American caſſia, with roundiſh pointed leaves. 2. The purging caſſia, or pudding pipe tree, &c. Many of theſe plants will flower the ſecond year, and ſome of them will produce ripe ſeeds with us. The ſecond ſort grows to be a very large tree, not only in Alexandria, but alſo in the Weſt Indies. This is what produces the purging caſſia of the ſhops. Miller.

CA'SSIDONY, or Stickadore. n. ſ. [ſtoechas, Latin.] The name of a plant.

CA'SSIOWARY. n. ſ. A large bird of prey in the Eaſt Indies.

There is in them no cecity, yet more than a cecutiency.
Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 18.

CEDAR. n. s. [cedrus, Lat.] A tree

It is evergreen, the leaves are much narrower than those of the pine-tree, and many of them produced out of one tubercle, resembling a painter's pencil, it hath male flowers, or katkin produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree. The seeds are produced in large cones, squamose and turbinated. The extension of the branches is very regular in cedar trees, the ends of the shoots declining, and thereby shewing their upper surface, which is constantly clothed with green leaves, so regularly as to appear at a distance like a green carpet, and, in waving about, make an agreeable prospect. It is surprising that this tree has not been more cultivated in England, for it would be a great ornament to barren break mountains, even in Scotland, where few other trees would grow, it being a native of Mount Libanus, where the snow continues most part of the year. What we find in Scripture, of the lofty cedars, is no ways applicable to the stature of this tree, for we find by those now growing in England, and by the testimony of travellers, that have seen those few remaining trees on Mount Libanus, they are not inclined to grow very lofty, but extend their branches very far, to which the allusion, made by the Psalmist, agrees very well, when, describing the flourishing state of a people, he says, they shall spread their branches like the cedar tree. Maundrel, in his Travels, says, he measured one of the largest cedars on Mount Libanus, and found it to be twelve yards six inches in circumference, and found, and thirty seven yards in the spread of its boughs. At about five or six yards from the ground, it was divided into five limbs, each of which was equal to a great tree. The wood of this famous tree is accounted proof against the putrefaction of animal bodies. The fine dust is thought to be one of the secrets used by the mountebanks, who pretend to have the embalming mystery. This wood is also said to yield an oil, which is famous for preserving books and writings, and the wood is thought by my lord Bacon to continue above a thousand years sound. It is also recorded, that, in the temple of Apollo, at Utica, there was found timber of near two thousand years old, and the statue of the goddess, in the famous Ephesian temple, was said to be of this material, as well as the timber work of that glorious structure. This sort of timber is very dry, and subject to split, nor does it well endure to be fastened with nails, therefore pins of the same wood are much preferable. Miller.

I must yield my body to the earth:
Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge,
Whose arms gave shelter to the princely eagle;
Under whose shade the ramping lion slept,
Whose top branch overpeer'd Jove's spreading tree,
And kept low shrubs from winter's pow'rful wind
Shakesp. Henry VI. p.

Some have affirmed, that it lives only upon air; but used to feed on flies, catched with its tongue, [illegible] is about ten inches long, and three thick; made of white flesh, round, but flat at the end, or hollow and open, resembling [illegible] shrinks, and grows longer This animal is said to assume the colour of those things to which it is applied, but our modern observers assure us, that its natural colour, when at rest and in the shade, is a bluish grey, though some are yellow, and others green, but both of a smaller kind. When it is exposed to the sun, the grey changes into a darker grey, inclining to a dun colour, and its parts, which have least of the light upon them, are changed into spots of different colours. The grain of its skin, when the light doth not shine upon it, is like cloth mixed with many colours. Sometimes when it is hunted, it seems to be speckled with dark spots, inclining to green. If it be put upon a black hat, it appears to be of a violet colour; and sometimes if it be wrapped up in linen, when it is taken off, it is white, but it changes colour only in some parts of the body Calmet

A chameleon is a creature about the bigness of an ordinary lizard, his head is proportionably big, and his eyes great; he moveth his head without writhing of his neck, which is inflexible, as a hog doth, his back crooked, his skin spotted with little tumours, less eminent nearer the belly, his tail slender and long, on each foot he hath five fingers, three on the outside, and two on the inside, his tongue of a marvellous length in respect of his body, and hollow at the end, which he will launch out to prey upon flies; of colour green, and of a dusky yellow, brighter and whiter towards the belly, yet spotted with blue, white, and red. Bacon's Natural History, N° 360.

I can add colours ev'n to the chameleon,
Change shapes with Proteus, for advantage Shakesp. Hen VI.

One part devours the other, and leaves not so much as a mouthful of that popular air, which the chameleons gulp after. Decay of Piety.

The thin chameleon, fed with air, receives
The colour of the thing to which he cleaves. Dryden.

This plant was formerly in great request for making green walks, and is still cultivated in physick gardens for medicinal use, though it grows wild in great plenty Miller.

Cool violets, and orpine growing still,
Embathed balm, and cheerful galingale,
Fresh coltsmary, and breathful chamomile,
Dull poppy, and drink-quick'ning setuale. Spenser's Muiop.

For though the chamomile, the more it is trodden on the faster it grows, yet youth, the more it is wasted, the sooner it wears. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. i.

Watery liquours force it, as distilled waters with diureticks, posset drink with chamomile flowers. Floyer on the Humours.

To CHAMP, v. a. [champoyer, Fr.]

1. To bite with a frequent action of the teeth.

Coffee and opium are taken down, tobacco but in smoke, and betle is but champed in the mouth with a little lime. Bacon.

The fiend reply'd not, overcome with rage,

Muttering and champing, as though his cud had troubled him, he gave occasion to Musidorus to come near him. Sidney.

They began to repent of that they had done, and resolve to champ upon the bit they had taken into their mouths. Hooker.

Hows did not answer equally to one another, but by his frequent motion and champing with them, it was evident they were neither luxated nor fractured. Wiseman.

CHAMPAIGN. n. s [campagne, Fr.] A flat open country

In the abuses of the customs, methinks, you have a fair champaign and open to you, in which you may at large stretch out your discourse. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Of all these bounds,
With shadowy forests and with champaigns rich'd,
We make thee lady Shakesp. King Lear.

If two bordering princes have their territory meeting on an open champaign, the more mighty will continually seek occasion to extend his limits unto the further border thereof Raleigh.

Sir John Norris maintained a retreat without disarray, by the space of some miles, part of the way champaign, unto the city of Gaunt, with less loss of men than the enemy. Bacon.

From his side two rivers flow'd,
Th' one winding, th' other straight, and left between Fair champaign, with less rivers interveen'd. Paradise Reg.

CHA'MPERTORS. n. f. [from champerty. In law.] Such as move suits, or cause them to be moved, either by their own or others procurement, and pursue, at their proper costs, to have part of the land in contest, or part of the gains. Cowel.

CHA'MPERTY. n. f. [champart, Fr. In law.] A maintenance of any man in his suit while depending, upon condition to have part of the thing when it is recovered. Cowel.

CHAMPI'GNON. n. f [champignon, Fr.] A kind of mushroom.

He vilier friends with doubtful mushrooms treats,
Secure for you, himself champignons eats. Dryden.

It has the resemblance of a large champignon before it is opened, branching out into a large round knob at one end.

Woodward on Fossils.

CHAMPION. n. f. [champion, Fr. campio, low Lat.]

1. A person who undertakes a cause by single combat.

In many armies, if the matter should be tried by duel between two champions, the victory would go on the one side.

Bacon's Coll. of Good and Evil.

For hot, cold, moist, and dry, four champions fierce,
Strive here for mast'ry, and to battle bring
Their embryon atoms. Par. Lost, b. ii. l. 898.

O light of Trojans, and support of Troy,
Thy father's champion, and thy country's joy! Dryden.

At length the adverse admirals appear,
The two bold champions of each country's right. Dryden.

3. In law.

In our common law, champion is taken no less for him that treth the combat in his own case, than for him that fighteth in the case of another. Cowel.

To CHA'MPION v. a. [from the noun.] To challenge to the combat.

The seed of Banquo, kings!
Rather than so, come, fate, into the list,
And champion me to th' utterance. Shakesp. Macbeth.

CHANCE. n. f. [chance, Fr.]

1. Fortune; the cause of fortuitous events.

As th' unthought accident is guilty
Of what we wildly do, so we profess
Ourselves to be the slaves of chance, and flies
Of every wind that blows. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

The only man of all that chance could bring,
To meet my arms, was worth the conquering. Dryden.

Chance is but a mere name, and really nothing in itself; a conception of our minds, and only a compendious way of speaking, whereby we would express, that such effects as are commonly attributed to chance, were verily produced by their true and proper causes, but without their design to produce them.

Bentley.

2. Fortune; the act of fortune, or chance.

These things are commonly not observed, but left to take their chance. Bacon's Essays.

3. Accident, casual occurrence, fortuitous event.

To say a thing is a chance or casualty, as it relates to second causes, is not profaneness, but a great truth, as signifying no more, than that there are some events besides the knowledge and power of second agents. South.

The beauty I beheld, has struck me dead;
Unknowingly she strikes, and kills by chance;
Poison is in her eyes, and death in ev'ry glance. Dryden.

All nature is but art, unknown to thee;
All chance direction, which thou canst not see. Pope.

4. Event; success; luck.

Now we'll together, and the chance of goodness
Be like our warranted quarrel! Shakesp. Macbeth.

5. Misfortune, unlucky accident.

You were as
To say, extremity was the trier of spirits,
That common chances common men could bear.

Shakesp. Coriolanus.

6. Possibility of any occurrence.

A chance, but chance may lead, where I may meet
Some wand'ring spirit of heav'n, by fountain side,
Or in thick shade retir'd. Paradise Lost, b. iv. l. 530.

Then your ladyship might have a chance to escape this adventure. Swift.

CHANCE. adj. [It is seldom used but in composition.] Happening by chance.

Now should they part, malicious tongues would say,
They met like chance companions on the way.

Dryden's Hind and Panther.

I would not take the gift,
Which, like a toy dropt from the hands of fortune,
Lay for the next chance comer. Dryden and Lee's OEdipus.

To CHANCE v. n. [from the noun.] To happen, to fall out, to fortune.

Think what a chance thou chancest on; but think,——
Thou hast thy mistress still. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

CHA'NCELLOR. n. f. [cancellarius, Lat. chancelier, Fr. from cancellare, literas vel scriptum lineis per medium ductis damnare, and seemeth of itself likewise to be derived à cancellis, which signify all one with κιγκλίδες, a lettice; that is, a thing made of wood or iron bars, laid crossways one over another, so that a man may see through them in and out. It may be thought that judgment seats were compassed in with bars, to defend the judges and other officers from the press of the multitude, and yet not to hinder any man's view.]

Quæsitus regni hic cancellarius Angli,
Primus sollicita mente petendus erit.
Hic est, qui regni leges cancellat iniquas,
Et mandata pii principis æqua facit.

Verses of Nigel de Wetekre to the bishop of Ely, chancellor to Richard I.

1. Cancellarius, at the first, signified the registers or actuaries in court; graphiarius, scil. qui conscribendis & excipiendis juri bus dant operam. But this name is greatly advanced, and not only in other kingdoms but in this, is given to him that is the chief judge in causes of property, for the chancellor hath power to moderate and temper the written law, and subjecteth himself only to the law of nature and conscience. Cowel.

Turn out, you rogue, how like a beast you lie
Go, buckle to the law: Is this an hour
To stretch your limbs? you'll ne'er be chancellor. Dryd. jun.

Aristides was a person of the strictest justice, and best acquainted with the laws, as well as forms of their government, so that he was in a manner chancellor of Athens. Swift.

2. CHANCELLOR in the Ecclesiastical Court. A bishop's lawyer, a man trained up in the civil and canon law, to direct the bishops in matters of judgment, relating as well to criminals as to civil affairs in the church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. A succession of one thing in the place of another.

O wond'rous changes of a fatal scene,
Still varying to the last! Dryden.

Nothing can cure this part of ill breeding, but change and variety of company, and that of persons above us. Locke.

Empires by various turns shall rise and set,
abandon'd tribes shall only know master, and a change of time.
how Timotheus' various lays surprize,
and alternate passions fall and rise!
While, at each change, the son of Libyan Jove
Now burns with glory, and then melts with love. Pope.

3. The time of the moon in which it begins a new monthly revolution

Take seeds or roots, and set some of them immediately after the change, and others of the same kind immediately after the full. Bacon's Nat. History, N° 89.

4. Novelty.

The hearts
Of all his people shall revolt from him,
And kiss the lips of unacquainted change. Shakesp. K. John.

Our fathers did, for change, to France repair,
And they, for change, will try our English air

Dryden's Spanish Friar, Prologue

5. In ringing; an alteration of the order in which a set of bells is sounded.

CHASE. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. Hunting, purſuit of any thing as game.

Whilſt he was hatt'ning, in the chaſe, it ſeems,
Of this fair couple, meets he on the way
The father of this ſeeming lady Shakeſp. Winter's Tale.

There is no chaſe more pleaſant, methinks, than to drive a thought, by good conduct, from one end of the world to another, and never to loſe ſight of it till it fall into eternity.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. Inclos'd to be hunted, appropriation to chaſe or ſport.

Concerning the beaſts of chaſe, whereof the buck is the firſt, he is called the firſt year a fawn. Shakeſp. Love's L. Loſt.

A maid I am, and of thy virgin train,
Oh! let me ſtill that ſpotleſs name retain,
Frequent the foreſts, thy chaſte will obey,
And only make the beaſts of chaſe my prey Dryden.

3. Purſuit of an enemy, or of ſomething noxious.

The admiral, with ſuch ſhips only as could ſuddenly be put in readineſs, made forth towards them; inſomuch as of one hundred ſhips, there came ſcarce thirty to work. Howbeit, with them, and ſuch as came daily in, we ſet upon them, and gave them chaſe. Bacon

One day, upon the ſudden, he ſallied out upon them with certain troops of horſemen, with ſuch violence, that, at the firſt onſet, he overthrew them, and, having them in chaſe, did ſpeedy execution. Knolles's Hiſt. of the Turks.

CHIRA'GRICAL. adj. [chiragra, Lat.] Having the gout in the hand; subject to the gout in the hand.

Chiragrical persons do suffer in the finger as well as in the rest, and sometimes first of all. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 5.

CHIRO'GRAPHER n. f. [χὴρ the hand, γράφω, to write.] He that exercises or professes the act or business of writing.

Thus passeth it from this office to the chirographer's, to be engrossed. Bacon's Office of Alienation.

CHIROGRAPHIST n. f. [See CHIROGRAPHER.] This word is used in the following passage, I think improperly, for one [illegible] the hand: the true word is chirosophist, or chiromancer.

Let the physiognomists examine his features; let the chirographists behold his palm; but, above all, let us consult for the calculation of his nativity. Arbuth. and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

CHIROGRAPHY. n. f. [See CHIROGRAPHER.] The art of writing.

CHIROMANCER. n. f. [See CHIROMANCY.] One that foretells future events by inspecting the hand.

The middle sort, who have not much to spare,
To chiromancers thrice a quarter repair,
Who clap the pretty palm, to make the lines more fair.
Dryden's Juvenal, sat. vi.

CHI'ROMANCY n. f. [χὴρ the hand, and μαντις, a prophet.] The art of foretelling the events of life, by inspecting the hand.

There is not much considerable in that doctrine of chiromancy that spots in the top of the nails, do signify things past, in the middle, things present; and at the bottom, events to come. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 22.

To CHIRP. v. n. [perhaps contracted from cheer up. The Dutch have kirken.] To make a cheerful noise, as birds, when they call without singing.

She chirping ran, he peeping flew away,
'Till hard by them both he and she did stay. Sidney.

Came he right now to sing a raven's note;
And thinks he, that the chirping of a wren
Can chase away the first conceived sound. Shak. Hen. VI.

No chirping lark the welkin sheen invokes. Gay's Past.

The careful hen
Calls all her chirping family around. Thomson's Spring

To CHIRP. v. a. [This seems apparently corrupted from cheer up.] To make cheerful.

Let no sober bigot here think it a sin,
To push on the chirping and moderate bottle. Johns. Tav. Ac.

Sir Balaam now, he lives like other folks,
He takes his chirping pint, he cracks his jokes. Pope.

CHIRP. [from the verb.] The voice of birds or insects.

Winds over us whisper'd, flocks by us did bleat,
And chirp went the grashopper under our feet. Spectat.

CHIRPER. n. f. [from chirp.] One that chirps; one that is cheerful.

To CHIRRE. v. n. [ceopian, Sax.] See CHURME.

To coo as a pigeon. Junius.

CHIRURGEON n. f. [χειρουργὸς, from χὴρ, the hand, and ἔργον, work.] One that cures ailments, not by internal medicines, but outward applications. It is now generally pronounced, and by many written, surgeon.

When a man's wounds cease to smart, only because he has lost his feeling, they are nevertheless mortal, for his not seeing his need of a chirurgeon. South's Sermons

CHIRU'RGERY. n. f [from chirurgeon.] The art of curing by external applications.

Gynecia having skill in chirurgery, an art in those days much esteemed. Sidney, b. ii.

Nature could do nothing in her case without the help of chirurgery, in drying up the luxurious flesh, and making way to pull out the rotten bones. Wiseman.

CHIRU'RGICAL } adj. See CHIRURGEON.
CHIRU'RGICK. }

1 Having qualities useful in outward applications to hurts.

As to the chirurgical or physical virtues of wax, it is reckoned a mean between hot and cold. Mortim. Husbandry.

2. Relating to the manual part of healing.

3. Manual in general, consisting in operations of the hand. This sense, though the first, according to etymology, is now scarce found.

The chirurgical or manual, doth refer to the making of instruments, and exercising particular experiments. Hale.

CHI'SEL. n. f [ciseau, Fr. of scissum, Lat.] An instrument with which wood or stone is pared away.

What fine chisel
Could ever yet cut breath? Let no man mock me,
For I will kiss her. Shakesp. Winter's Tale

There is such a seeming softness in the limbs, as if not a chisel had hewed them out of stone, but a pencil had drawn and stroaked them in oil. Wotton's Architecture.

Imperfect shapes in marble such are seen,
When the rude chisel does the man begin. Dryden.

To CHI'SEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut with a chisel.

CHIT. n. f. [according to Dr Hickes, from kind, Germ. child, perhaps from chico, little, Span.]

1. A child, a baby. Generally used of young persons in contempt.

These will appear such chits in story,
'Twill turn all politicks to jest. Anonymous

2. The shoot of corn from the end of the grain. A cant term with maltsters.

Barley, couched four days, will begin to shew the chit or sprit at the root-end. Mortimer's Husbandry

3. A freckle, [from chick-pease.] In this sense it is seldom used.

To CHIT. v. n. [from the noun.] To sprout, to shoot at the end of the grain.

I have known barley chit in seven hours after it had been thrown forth. Mortimer's Husbandry

CHI'TCHAT. n. f. [corrupted by reduplication from chat.] Prattle; idle prate; idle talk. A word only used in ludicrous conversation.

I am a member of a female society, who call ourselves the chitchat club. Spectat N°. 560.

CHI'TTERLINGS n. f. without singular. [from schyterlingh, Dut. Minshew, from kutteln, Germ. Skinner.] The guts, the bowels. Skinner.

CHI'TTY. adj. [from chit.] Childish; like a baby.

CHI'VALROUS. adj. [from chivalry.] Relating to chivalry, or errant knighthood, knightly; warlike, adventurous, daring. A word now out of use.

And noble minds of yore allied were
In brave pursuit of chivalrous emprise. Fairy Queen, b. i.

CHI'VALRY n. f. [chevalerie, Fr. knighthood, from cheval, a horse, as equus in Latin.]

1. Knighthood; a military dignity.

There be now, for martial encouragement, some degrees and orders of chivalry; which, nevertheless, are conferred promiscuously upon soldiers and no soldiers. Bacon's Essay, 20.

2. The qualifications of a knight; as valour, dexterity in arms.

Thou hast slain
The flow'r of Europe for his chivalry. Shakesp. Henry VI.

I may speak it to my shame,
I have a truant been to chivalry. Shakesp. Hen. IV part i.

3. The general system of knighthood.

Solemnly he swore,
That by the faith which knights to knighthood bore,
And whate'er else to chivalry belongs,
He would not cease 'till he reveng'd their wrongs. Dryd. Fab.

4. An adventure; an exploit.

They four doing acts more dangerous, though less famous, because they were but private chivalries. Sidney, b. ii.

5. The body or order of knights.

And by his light
Did all the chivalry of England move
To do brave acts. Shakesp. Henry IV part ii.

6. In law.

Servitium militare, of the French, chevalier; a tenure of land by knights service. There is no land but is holden mediately or immediately of the crown, by some service or other, and therefore are all our freeholds, that are to us and our heirs, called feuda, fees, as proceeding from the benefit of the king. As the king gave to the nobles large possessions for this or that rent and service, so they parcelled out their lands, so received for rents and services as they thought good: and those services are by Littleton divided into chivalry and socage. The one is martial and military, the other, clownish and rustick. Chivalry, therefore, is a tenure of service, whereby the tenant is bound to perform some noble or military office unto his lord, and is of two sorts; either regal, that is, such as may hold only of the king; or such as may also hold of a common person as well as of the king. That which may hold only of the king is properly called sergeantry, and is again divided into grand or petit, i. e. great or small. Chivalry that may

may hold of a common perſon, as well as of the king, is called feutagium Cowel.

7. It ought properly to be written chevelry. It is a word not much uſed, but in old poems or romances.

CHOICE. n. ſ. [choix, French.]

1. The act of chooſing, determination between different things propoſed; election.

If you oblige me ſuddenly to chuſe,
The choice is made; for I muſt both refuſe. Dryd. Ind. Emp.
Soft elocution doth thy ſtyle renown,
Gentle or ſharp, according to thy choice,
To laugh at follies, or to lath at vice. Dryd. Perſ. ſat. v.

2. The power of chooſing; election.

Choice there is not, unleſs the thing which we take to be ſo in our power, that we might have refuſed it. If fire conſume the ſtable, it chooſeth not ſo to do, becauſe the nature thereof is ſuch that it can do no other. Hooker, b. i. ſ. 7.

There's no liberty like the freedom of having it at my own choice, whether I will live to the world, or to myſelf L'Eſtr.

To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction; for where there is force, there can be no choice. Whereas all moral goodneſs conſiſteth in the elective act of the underſtanding will. Grew's Coſmol. b. iii. c. 2. ſ. 23.

Whether he will remove his contemplation from one idea to another, is many times in his choice. Locke.

3. Care in chooſing, curioſity of diſtinction.

JuliusCæſar did write a collection of apophthegms: it is pity his book is loſt, for I imagine they were collected with judgment and choice. Bacon's Apophthegms.

4. The thing choſen; the thing taken or approved, in preference to others.

Your choice is not ſo rich in birth as beauty:
That you might well enjoy her. Shakeſp. Winter's Tale.
Take to thee, from among the cherubim,
Thy choice of flaming warriors. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. xi.
Now Mars, ſhe ſaid, let fame exalt her voice,
Nor let thy conqueſts only be her choice. Prior.

5. The beſt part of any thing, that is more properly the object of choice.

The choice and flower of all things profitable in other books, the pſalms do both more briefly contain, and more movingly alſo expreſs. Hooker, b. v. ſ. 37.

Thou art a mighty prince, in the choice of our ſepulchres bury thy dead. Gen. xxiii. 6.

The riders, the flow'r and choice
Of many provinces, from bound to bound. Addiſ. Par. Reg.

6. Several things propoſed at once, as objects of judgment and election.

A braver choice of dauntleſs ſpirits,
Did never float upon the ſwelling tide. Shakeſp. K. John.

7. To make CHOICE of. To chooſe; to take from ſeveral things propoſed.

Wiſdom, of what herſelf approves, makes choice,
Nor is led captive by the common voice. Denham.

CHOICE. adj. [choiſi, French.]

1. Select; of extraordinary value.

After having ſet before the king the choiceſt of wines and fruits, told him the beſt part of his entertainment was to come. Guardian, N°. 167.

These marks of church and churchmen he design'd,
And living taught, and dying left behind. Dryden's Fables.

2. An adherent to the church of England.

CHURCH WARDENS n. f. [See WARDEN] Are officers yearly chosen, by the consent of the minister and parishioners, according to the custom of each place, to look to the church, church-yard, and such things as belong to both; and to observe the behaviour of the parishioners, for such faults as appertain to the jurisdiction or censure of the ecclesiastical court. They are a kind of corporation, enabled by law to sue for any thing belonging to their church, or poor of their parish. Cowel.

There should likewise church-wardens, of the gravest men in the parish, be appointed, as they be here in England. Spenf.

Our church-wardens
Feast on the silver, and give us the farthings. Gay.

CHURCHYARD n. f. The ground adjoining to the church, in which the dead are buried; a cemetery.

I am almost afraid to stand alone
Here in the churchyard, yet I will adventure. Shakespeare

In churchyards, where they bury much, the earth will consume the corps in far shorter time than other earth will. Bacon.

No place so sacred from such fops is barr'd;
Nor is Paul's church more safe than Paul's churchyard Pope.

CI'TRINE. n. f. [from citrus, Latin.]

A species of crystal of an extremely pure, clear, and fine texture, generally free from flaws and blemishes. It is ever found in a long and slender column, irregularly hexangular, and terminated by an hexangular pyramid. It is from one to four or five inches in length. These crystals are of an extremely beautiful yellow, differing in degrees from that of a strong ochre colour to that of the peel of a lemon; and they have a very elegant brightness and transparence. This stone is very plentiful in the West Indies. Our jewelers have learned from the French and Italians to call it citrine; and often cut stones for rings out of it, which are generally mistaken for topazes. Hill on Fossils.

CITRON-TREE n. f [from citrus, Latin.]

It hath broad stiff leaves, like those of the laurel. The flowers consist of many leaves, expanded like a rose: the cup of the flower is slender and fleshy, and is divided into five segments at the top. The pistil becomes an oblong, thick, fleshy fruit, which is very full of juice, and contains several land seeds. Genoa is the great nursery of Europe for these sorts of trees. One sort, with a pointed fruit, is in so great esteem, that the single fruits are sold at Florence for two shillings each. This fruit is not to be had in perfection in any part of Italy, but the plain between Pisa and Leghorn. Miller.

To CLA'RIFY. v. a. [clarifier, French.]

1. To purify or clear any liquor, to separate feculences or impurities.

The apothecaries clarify their syrups with whites of eggs beaten with the juices which they would clarify, and of eggs gather all the dregs and grosser parts of the juice to them; and after, the syrup being set on the fire, the whites of eggs themselves harden, and are taken forth. Bacon.

2. To brighten; to illuminate: this sense is rare.

The will was then ductile and pliant to all the motions of right reason: it met the dictates of a clarified understanding half way. South's Sermons.

The Christian religion is the only means that God has sanctified, to set fallen man upon his legs again, to clarify his reason, and to rectify his will. South's Sermons.

CLA'RION n. f. [clarin, Span. from clarus, loud, Lat.] A trumpet; a wind instrument of war

And after, to his palace he them brings,
With shams, and trumpets, and with clarions sweet;
And all the way the joyous people sings. Fairy Queen.

Then strait commands, that at the warlike sound
Of trumpets loud, and clarions, be uprear'd
The mighty standard Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i. l. 53

Let fuller notes th' applauding world amaze,
And the loud clarion labour in your praise. Pope.

CLA'RITY. n. f. [clarté, French, claritas, Lat.] Brightness, splendour.

A light by abundant clarity invisible; an understanding which itself can only comprehend. Sir Walter Raleigh.

CLA'RY. n. f. An herb.

It hath a labiated flower of one leaf, whose upper lip is short and crested; but the under one is divided into three parts: the middle division is hollowed like a spoon. Out of the flower-cup arises the pointal, fixed like a nail to the hinder part of the flower, and attended with four embryo's, which turn to so many roundish seeds, inclosed in the cup of the flower. It grows wild on dry banks. Miller.

Plants that have circled leaves do all abound with moisture. The weakest kind of curling is roughness, as in clary and burr. Bacon's Natural History, N°. 651.

To CLASH. v. n. [klatsen, Dut. to make a noise.]

1. To make a noise by mutual collision; to strike one against another.

Three times, as of the clashing sound
Of arms, we heard. Denham.

Those few that should happen to clash, might rebound after the collision; or if they cohered, yet, by the real conflict with other atoms, might be separated again. Bentley.

How many candles may send out their light, without clashing upon one another; which argues the smallness of the parts of light, and the largeness of the interstices between particles of air and other bodies. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

2. To act with opposite power, or contrary direction.

Neither was there any queen-mother who might clash with his counsellors for authority Bacon's Henry VIII.

Those that will not be convinced what a help this is to the magistracy, would find it, if they should chance to clash. South's Sermons.

3. To contradict, oppose.

Wherever there are men, there will be clashing sometime or other; and a knock, or a contest, spoils all. L'Estrange.

The absurdity in this instance is obvious; and yet every time that clashing metaphors are put together, this fault is committed. Spectator, N°. 595.

To CLASH. v. a. To strike one thing against another, so as to produce a noise

The nodding statue clash'd his brass,
And with a sullen sound and feeble cry,
Half sunk, and half pronounced the word of victory Dryd.

CLASH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A noisy collision of two bodies.

The clash of arms and voice of men we hear Dryden.
He nobly seiz'd thee in the dire alarms
Of war and slaughter and the clash of arms. Pope's Odyss.

2. Opposition; contradiction.

Then from the clashes between popes and kings,
Debate, like sparks from flint's collision, springs. Denham.

COCOA. n. ſ. [cacao it, Span. and therefore more properly written

A ſpecies of palm-tree, cultivated in moſt of the inhabited parts of the Eaſt and Weſt Indies, but thought a native of the Maldives. It is one of the moſt uſeful trees to the inhabitants of America. The bark of the nut is made into cordage, and the ſhell into drinking bowls. The kernel of the nut affords them a wholeſome food, and the milk contained in the ſhell a cooling liquor. The leaves of the trees are uſed for thatching their houſes, and are alſo wrought into baſkets, and moſt other things that are made of oſiers in Europe. Miller.

The cacao or chocolate nut is a fruit of an oblong figure, much reſembling a large olive in ſize and ſhape. It is compoſed of a thin but hard and woody coat or ſkin, of a dark blackiſh colour, and of a dry kernel, filling up its whole cavity, fleſhy, dry, firm, and ſaltiſh to the touch, of a duſky colour, an agreeable ſmell, and a pleaſant and peculiar taſte. It was unknown to us 'till the diſcovery of America, where the natives not only drank the liquor made from the nuts, in the manner we do chocolate, but alſo uſed them as money. The tree is not very tall, but grows regularly, and is of a beautiful form eſpecially when loaded with its fruit. Its item is of the thickneſs of a man's leg, and but a few feet in height, its bark rough, and full of tubercles; and its leaves ſix or eight inches long, half as much in breadth, and pointed at the ends. The flowers ſtand on the branches, and even on the trunk of the tree, in cluſters, each having its own pedicle, an inch and ſometimes leſs in length; they are ſmall, of a yellowiſh colour, and are ſucceeded by the fruit, which is large and oblong, reſembling a cucumber, five, ſix, or eight inches length, and three or four in thickneſs, and, when fully is of a purple colour. Within the cavity of this fruit the cocoa nuts, uſually about thirty in number. This tree flowers twice or three times in the year, and ripens as many ſeaſons of fruits. *Hill's Hiſtory of the Mat. COFFEE. n. f. [It is originally Arabick, pronounced cahue by the Turks, and cahuah by the Arabs.] The tree is a species of Arabick JESSAMINE, which see.
It is found to succeed as well in the Caribbee islands as in their native place of growth: but whether the coffee produced in the West Indies will prove as good as that from Mocha in Arabia Felix, time will discover. The berry brought from the Levant is most esteemed, and the berry, when ripe, is found as hard as horn. Miller.
COFFEE also denotes a drink prepared from the berries, very familiar in Europe for these eighty years, and among the Turks for one hundred and fifty. Some refer the invention of coffee to the Persians; from whom it was learned, in the fifteenth century, by a mufti of Aden in the Red Sea, where it soon came in vogue, and passed from thence to Mecca, and from Arabia Felix to Cairo. From Egypt the use of coffee advanced to Syria and Constantinople. Thevenot, the traveller, was the first who brought it to France, and a Greek servant, called Pasqua, brought into England by Mr. Daniel Edwards, a Turky merchant, in 1652, to make his coffee, first set up the profession of coffeeman, and introduced the drink among us; though some say Dr. Harvey had used it before. Chambers.
They have in Turky a drink called coffee, made of a berry of the same name, as black as soot, and of a strong scent, but not aromatical; which they take, beaten into powder, in water, as hot as they can drink it. This drink comforteth the brain and heart, and helpeth digestion. Bacon.
To part her time 'twixt reading and bohea,
Or over cold coffee trifle with the spoon. Pope.

From his own ground (a small well-watered spot);
Stripp'd off the stalks of all their leaves; the best
She cull'd, and then with handy care she dress'd. Dryden.

How turnips hide their swelling heads below,
And how the closing coleworts upwards grow Gay.

COLICK n. f. [colicus, Latin.]

It strictly is a disorder of the colon; but loosely, any disorder of the stomach or bowels that is attended with pain. There are four sorts: 1. A bilious colick, which proceeds from an abundance of acrimony or choler irritating the bowels, so as to occasion continual gripes, and generally with a looseness, and this is best managed with lenitives and emollients. 2. A flatulent colick, which is pain in the bowels from flatus's and wind, which distend them into unequal and unnatural capacities, and this is managed with carminatives and moderate opiates. 3. An hysterical colick, which arises from disorders of the womb, and is communicated by consent of parts to the bowels; and is to be treated with the ordinary hystericks. 4. A nervous colick, which is from convulsive spasms and contortions of the guts themselves, from some disorders of the spirits, or nervous fluid, in their component fibres; whereby their capacities are in many places straightened, and sometimes so as to occasion most nate obstructions: this is best remedied by brisk cathartick, joined with opiates and emollient diluters. There is also a species of this distemper which is commonly called the stone colick, by consent of parts, from the irritation of the stone or gravel in the bladder or kidneys, and this is most commonly to be treated by nephritick and diureticks, and is greatly assisted with the carminative [illegible] enema clysters. Quincy.

Colicks of infants proceed from acidity, and the air in the aliment expanding itself, while the aliment ferments. Arbuth.

COLICK. adj. Affecting the bowels.

intestine stone, and ulcer, colick pangs. Milton.

To COLLA'PSE. v. n. [collabor, collapsus, Latin.] To fall together; to close so as that one side touches the other.

CO'LON n. f [κῶλον]

1. A point [:] uſed to mark a pauſe greater than that of a comma, and leſs than that of a period. Its uſe is not very exactly fixed, nor is it very neceſſary, being confounded by moſt with the ſemicolon. It was uſed before punctuation was refined, to mark almoſt any ſenſe leſs than a period. To apply it properly, we ſhould place it, perhaps, only where the ſenſe is continued without dependence of grammar or conſtruction; as, I love him, I deſpiſe him. I have long truſted to truſt, but ſhall never forbear to ſuccour him.
2. The greateſt and wideſt of all the inteſtines, about eight or nine hands breadth long. It begins where the ileum ends, in the cavity of the oſ ilium on the right ſide, from thence aſcending by the kidney, on the ſame ſide, it paſſes under the concave ſide of the liver, to which it is ſometimes tied, as likewiſe to the gall-bladder, which tinges it yellow in that place: then it runs under the bottom of the ſtomach to the ſpleen in the left ſide, to which it is alſo knit: from thence it turns down to the left kidney; and thence paſſing, in form of an S, it terminates at the upper part of the os ſacrum, in the [illegible]. Quincy.

Now, by your cruelty hard bound,
I ſtrain my guts, my colon wound. Sw[illegible].

The contents of the colon are of a ſower, fetid, acid ſmell in rabbits. Floyer on the Humours.

COLONEL n. ſ. [Of uncertain etymology. Skinner imagines it originally columnarius, the leader of a column. Minſheu deduces it from corona, a pillar; as patriæ columen; exercitus columen. Each is plauſible.] The chief commander of a regiment, a field officer of the higheſt rank, next to the general officers. It is now generally ſounded with only two unſtruck ſyllables, cel nel.

There it is not strange, that the mind should give itself up to the common opinion, or render itself to the first comer. Locke.

COMET n. s. [cometa, Latin, a hairy star.]

A heavenly body in the planetary region appearing suddenly, and again disappearing, and, during the time of its appearance, moving through its proper orbit, like a planet. The orbits of comets are ellipses, having one of their foci in the center of the sun; and being very long and eccentrick, they become invisible, when in that part most remote from the sun. Comets, popularly called blazing stars, are distinguished from other stars by a long train or tail of light, always opposite to the sun. Hence arises a popular division of comets into three kinds, bearded, tailed, and haired comets, though the division rather relates to the different circumstances of the same comet, than to the phænomena of the several. Thus when the comet is eastward of the sun, and moves from it, the comet is said to be bearded, barbatus, because the light marches before it. When the light is westward of the sun, the comet is said to be tailed, because the train follows it. When the comet and the sun are diametrically opposite, the earth being between them, the train is hid behind the body of the comet, excepting a little that appears around it, in form of a border of hair, hence called crinitus.

According to Sir Isaac Newton, the tail of a comet is a very thin slender vapour, emitted by the head or nucleus of the comet, heated by their near neighbourhood to the sun, and this vapour is furnished by the atmosphere of the comet. The tails are of various lengths; and being produced in the perihelions of the comets, will go off along with their heads into remote regions, and there gradually vanish, till the comets return towards the sun. The vapours of comets being thus dilated, rarefied, and diffused through all the celestial regions, may probably, by little and little, by means of their own gravity, be attracted down to the planets, and become intermingled with their atmospheres. For the conservation of the water, and moisture of the planets, comets seem absolutely requisite, from whose condensed vapours and exhalations all that moisture which is spent in vegetations and putrefactions, and turned into dry earth, may be resupplied and recruited, for all vegetables grow and increase wholly from fluids; and, as to their greatest part, turn by putrefaction into earth again; an earthy slime being perpetually precipitated to the bottom of putrefying liquors. Hence the quantity of dry earth must continually increase, and the moisture of the globe decrease, and at last be quite evaporated, if it have not a continual supply from some part or other of the universe. And I suspect, adds Sir Isaac, that the spirit which makes the finest, subtilest, and best part of our air, and which is absolutely requisite for the life and being of all things, comes principally from the comets. On this principle there seems to be some foundation for the popular opinion of presages from comets; since the tail of a comet, thus intermingled with our atmosphere, may produce changes very sensible in animal and vegetable bodies.

The same great author has computed that the sun's heat, in the comet of 1680, was, to his heat with us at Midsummer, as twenty-eight thousand to one, and that the heat of the body of the comet, was near two thousand times as great as that of red-hot iron. He also calculates, that a globe of red-hot iron, of the dimensions of our earth, would scarce be cool in fifty thousand years. If then the comet be supposed to cool a hundred times as fast as red-hot iron, yet, since its heat was a thousand times greater, supposing it of the bigness of the earth, it would not be cool in a million of years. Hitherto no comet has threatened the earth with a nearer approach than that of 1680; for, by calculation, Dr. Halley found, on November 11, that comet was not above one semidiameter of the earth to the northward of the way of the earth; at which time, had the earth been in that part of its orbit, the comet would have had a parallax equal to that of the moon. What might have been the consequence of so near an appulse? a contact or shock of the celestial bodies? a deluge, Mr Whiston says. Astronomers have been divided about the return of comets, and time and observation must determine the question. However, Dr Halley has foretold the return of one in 1758, which formerly appeared in 1456. Trevoux, Chambers.

And wherefore gaze this goodly company,
As if they saw some wondrous monument,
Some comet, or unusual prodigy Shak. Tam. of the Shrew.
